FALL 1973

No. 1

ON OUR COVER: President Weber in his office on the second floor of Selinsgrove Hall. Susquehanna's President submits an annual Report each fall, and five years ago we began making them a part of the ALUMNUS so that alumni and parents could share in the University's progress and plans. This is Dr. Weber's 15th Report since coming to Susquehanna. It is must reading.

In a related vein, Larry Isaacs '43 has prepared a thoughtful piece on "Financial Problems in Higher Education." We believe our readers will find this article interesting and informative—and that, taken together, the two features provide a lot of understanding about the subject dear to most of our hearts.

REPORT OF THE PRESIDENT 1972-73

INTRODUCTION

IN FEBRUARY OF 1974 I will conclude my fifteenth year as President of Susquehanna University. The evolution of the University during this period has been predicated by the enormous changes which have confronted higher education. From a rather sparse office in Selinsgrove Hall and with an administrative and teaching staff of under 50, an operating budget of $500,000 and a student body of less than 500, one could look out over the campus in 1959 and somewhat apprehensively conclude that, unlike the tenor of the 1950s, growth would be the callword for Susquehanna during the 1960s. Unsettling was the notion of what growth might do to the University, an institution whose character reflected an intimateness where compactness and limited size afforded worthy assets.

Recognizing the need to adapt facilities and programs during the post-sputnik era to the growing educational demands of the country, the University embarked on an ambitious but controlled expansion program which, we hoped, would provide modern educational opportunities for a growing number of students without dissipating the qualities so cherished during the era of President Smith.

Looking out my office window today I can't help but reflect that the decision to expand was the only viable alternative available to the University. Fortunately, succeeding events — coupled with the dedication and hard work of countless faculty and staff — helped confirm the wisdom of this decision. The Susquehanna of today is an educational institution attuned to the times and in step with the contemporary needs of young people. Our enrollment of 1400, the faculty and staff of 150, and an operating budget of almost $5 million indicate both evidence of growth and maturity as well as Susquehanna's desire to provide a challenging academic climate within which learning can take place.

One is now tempted to look out the window beyond the campus to the hills to the west of the University and prophesize what next should be done to ensure educational relevance for Susquehanna during the 1970s. Fortunately, our planning processes are now more sophisticated and the wisdom engendered by the maturity of the University during the decade just past provides us with a vision of our future direction.

This report will speak, in part, to the events of this past year. More importantly, perhaps, the reports hope to provide the reader with some modest insight into plans for the future. Change, though a certainty in today's society, can be uncontrolled and unsettling, but with proper planning and with a clear-cut set of objectives, a University can program its advancement in such a way as to be systematically compatible with its aims and objectives and, most importantly, with the educational needs of its students.

A BROADER PERSPECTIVE

WE ARE OFTENTIMES only aware of the obvious that takes place on a college campus — the presence of 100 faculty members in whose trust the students place the direction of their learning experience, and an administration whose duties include the implementation of broad policy guidelines. Behind this vibrant growth and development, however, is a group of men and women from all walks of life responsible for the wellbeing of the University. Active participation by the Board of Directors in the affairs of Susquehanna has greatly enhanced the development of the college over the past 15 years.

Some members of this governing body spend as much as 10 to 15 hours each week on University business as we draw on their particular expertise to effect a smooth and orderly pattern of institutional management. Finance, engineering and fund-raising talents of Board members serve to strengthen the management of Susquehanna, particularly during these unsettling times when financial limitations have dictated a reordering of priorities and the application of business acumen.

The composition of the Board in recent years has evolved into an active group of 40 persons representing business, the law, medicine, education and the Church. Such variety of backgrounds and personal and professional accomplishment uniquely equip the University to face the challenges of the 1970s with assurance. Operating under a "committee action plan," the Board consists of standing committees answering to an Executive Committee. Certain groups such as the Finance and Buildings and Grounds committees meet monthly to conduct pressing business and to manage the $5 million budget. During the past several years, difficult ones for higher education, the responsiveness of these groups has been directly responsible for our ability to operate within a balanced budget and to remain fiscally strong. Other committees such as Development, Academic Affairs, Religious Interests, Honorary Degrees, and Alumni Relations meet less frequently but remain actively in touch with University affairs. Most committees have faculty and student representation to ensure communication and to facilitate the decision-making process.

Recognizing the changing nature of the educational experience, the Board has just spent three years rewriting the University's constitution. Implicit in the study were the results of long-range planning reports, contemplated curriculum revisions and projected patterns of educational and auxiliary services evolving on the campus. Within this revised constitution are changes which reflect the work of the total University in providing an enabling document for future progress. The revised constitution provides a flexible framework within which the University can develop and recognizes the responsibility 1) of the Board to provide for the continued health of the institution; 2) of the administration to organize and supervise the orderly operation of all the activities and services of the institution; 3) of the faculty to provide excellence in teaching and also to inspire; and 4) of the students to take full advantage of these opportunities and to participate in the orderly process of change which will be required if the Susquehanna community is to meet the challenges and responsibilities of the future.

The several basic philosophical changes in the constitution should be of interest to alumni and friends, since they give evidence of a broadened view of education as envisioned by the Board. Such changes are:

1. To affirm the purposes and objectives of the University in light of today's concern about the structure and purpose of higher education.

2. To broaden the role of the University in such a way as to recognize the need to transcend the "ivory tower" by providing expanded educational opportunities. It is recognized not only that there is nothing sacred about four years as a normal term for the undergraduate experience, but that it need not be demeaning for the liberal arts college to offer continuing education and associate degree programs for the local region.

3. By the same token, recognition is given to the need to expand off-campus learning experiences and to endorse innovative and cooperative educational concepts.

4. Recognizing the changing nature of the University and its governance procedures and the need to involve all elements of the campus in the decision-making process, the revised constitution increases the representation of faculty and students on the various Board committees. In addition, the number of alumni representatives on the Board of Directors is increased to five.

These changes, I believe, are important in that they speak to a new and emerging philosophy which broadens Susquehanna's educational responsibility. All alumni and friends should understand that the University recognizes this expanded responsibility both to itself and to society and will move forward to meet this commitment.

ADMISSIONS

AS OF JULY 1, 1973, the Admissions Office had processed 1331 completed applications for the fall of 1973. We anticipate that 420 students will accept our offer of admission, thereby assuring a total University enrollment of 1400 again this fall.

Of significance is the fact that the total number of applications for the fall is down slightly from previous years, perhaps reflecting several important changes in student attitudes. First, the discontinuation of the draft has relieved many students of the pressure to gain immediate admission to college in order to avoid possible induction into military service. As a result, guidance counselors inform us that, in some cases, as many as 10-15 percent fewer of their students are seeking immediate admission to college. Some are taking more time to formulate career plans and utilize an interim period between high school and post-secondary study for work or travel. This trend, of itself, may be a positive one in that a more mature student equipped with a better knowledge of career objectives will be making application to Susquehanna. Second, we find a definite decrease in the number of applicants enrolled in liberal arts. For the coming fall, Liberal Arts deposits decreased by 18 percent, while those in Business and Music rose 38 percent and 51 percent respectively. While trends are not yet evident, we assume that the tight job market for liberal arts majors coupled with more competitive graduate school admission prompts many students to consider more traditional forms of career education. Susquehanna continues to be cognizant of the need to structure its educational program on a liberal arts foundation but, at the same time, we must be aware of the need to equip students more specifically for today's job market.

Gettysburg: Henry J. Keil '39, Leonia, N.J.; C. Thomas Aikens II, State College, Pa.; Dr. Roger M. Blough '25, New York City; Mrs. Kimball D. Miller, Williamsport, Pa. with Mary L. Furman '74, Sayre, Pa. Student and faculty representatives have participated for several years.

As a part of the University's self-study in preparation for the evaluation next winter by the Middle States Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, it has been determined that the academic level of students enrolling at Susquehanna has remained basically the same over the past six years. Seventy percent of the entering men rank in the upper 40 percent of the entering men rank in the upper 40 percent of the women come to us from the upper two-fifths of their class. In addition, 82 percent of the women and 72 percent of the men choose Susquehanna as a result of a belief that our social and cultural atmosphere is more compatible with their own interests than the other schools to which they applied. A significant change has taken place over the past decade in the geographic composition of the student body. During this period, the enrollment of Pennsylvania students has declined from 70 to 54 percent and the number from both New Jersey and New York has increased markedly.

Encouraging to us is that Susquehanna's fee schedule has been at least partially successful in keeping a private education within the reach of most families. An analysis of parental income currently shows that for the entering class, about 5 percent of the parents earned less than $6,000; 11 percent earned between $6,000 and $10,000; 24 percent earned $10,000 to $15,000; 31 percent earned $15,000 to $25,000; 18 percent earned $25,000 to $35,000, and 11 percent earned $35,000 and above. By keeping costs moderate and utilizing all financial aid resources at our disposal, Susquehanna was able to allocate aid amounting to over $332,000 for the members of the Class of 1973 who graduated in June.

IT IS EVIDENT that we are in the initial stages of yet another change on the college campus. The activism of the late 1960s and early 1970s has given way to a new type of student quest for identity centered around personal fulfillment that tends to shun collective activism. A "return to the books" has been reported on campuses throughout the country as more students again seem seriously intent on pursuing their academic interests. In Susquehanna's case, we note with a particular pride that students seem more preoccupied with academics than at any time in recent years. In part this may be attributed to the new 3-3 curriculum which compacts work into three terms of ten weeks each and leaves less time for non-academic pursuits. An additional factor appears to be the supply and demand situation in the marketplace and the competitive nature of the job market. We note that during the past two years fewer firms have recruited on the Susquehanna campus, thereby reflecting the generally tight market — particularly for the liberal arts majors and those preparing to teach. This leads to a third identifying characteristic of today's student, which seems to be a desire for increased vocational training to ensure employability following graduation. I referred to this matter of vocational and career preparation in my report last year, but it is important to add that this trend now seems to be established and our obligation becomes that of providing more opportunities for career preparation. The flexibility of the 3-3 program provides students with this type of opportunity. The liberal arts major, for example, has opportunities to take coursework in computer science, accounting, business or statistics, thus enhancing his chances for gainful employment while still pursuing his or her major field of academic interest.

Another point of change on the campus refers to the need of many students for a new and different dimension to the four-year undergraduate education. The off-campus learning experience has gained increasing favor and we project that within the next five years over 10 percent of the student body will spend some portion of their college life in off-campus study. While less vocal about it than yesterday's student, today's student is still very much interested in social justice, a world of peace, a tolerable environment, and improving the destiny of the poor. Some have rightfully questioned whether the conventional educational process at the undergraduate level prepares a student to meet such problems head-on. As Louis T. Benezet, President of the State University of New York at Albany, has said. "The colleges have traditionally told students to learn what those students before you have learned: knowledge of man's history, his thought, and his creations; and knowledge of the make-up of the natural universe. Today's students reply, 'That's all right for professional scholars. It's not all right for those who want to do something about society as matters are going now.'

Students tend to become critical of those courses which lack relevance, those in which the teacher fails to denote a relationship of the subject matter to the world today. It is our belief that historical perspective is just as important as ever, but the scholar of today must be alert to the need to satisfy this insatiable curiosity of students who demand an understanding of contemporary problems.

This whole matter of relevance, though sometimes worn and frayed around the edges, is most applicable now and has led to a new and vibrant dimension in undergraduate education. A greater number of students spend a full term or a part of a term in an off-campus experience often related to career objectives. The Washington and United Nation semesters provide those students interested in government with the opportunity to spend a term in either Washington, D.C. or New York examining the functioning of government, while psychology and sociology majors may spend time away from campus serving as interns at the Selinsgrove State School and Hospital or with a social agency. The formalizing of the internship as an academic experience provides an extension of the educational process which allows the student to gain practical, on-the-job experience that reinforces classroom learning and better prepares him for future employment. During the past year about 60 students served internships, and we predict that this interest will grow as the programs become more formalized within the various academic departments. Faculty members are becoming more sensitive to this need for off-campus learning as an integral part of the learning experience. For years Susquehanna has conducted internships in accounting and student teaching and today's expanded program merely recognizes the worth of such pursuits to the total educational mission of the University.

Such changes in student needs have led to a change in emphasis for the Student Personnel Office which, for many years, was primarily interested in enforcing campus rules and regulations pertaining to social conduct. More recently, the college campus has seen a relaxation of parietals as more and more responsibility has been placed on the individual student who must now accept responsibility for his own actions. The maturity of today's college student would seem to speak well for his ability to accept this new freedom and to adjust his social and living habits to conform with the objectives of the college community as a whole. Emphasis by the Dean of Students on career guidance and individual counseling have replaced the traditional "enforcement"

As a result, this new direction in guidance and counseling tends to reinforce the emerging University-wide concept of designing individual educational programs and off-campus experiences for students in recognition of individual career goals and objectives.

FACULTY

MUCH IS SAID about the increasing educational responsibility placed upon any institution of higher education. Referring again to the University's revised constitution, a philosophy for change is underscored in the preamble:

The Susquehanna community recognizes that imperfect men join in various ways to make an imperfect society, but that within the Susquehanna community rests the ideal that imperfect men can cooperate to build a structure or system which is more perfect than the sum of its parts. Presenting a zeal for excellence, under the guidance of the Christian ethic, the Susquehanna community's purpose is to provide a life experience which will include training in specific knowledge and skills, the development of independent learning abilities, and the participation in an active and viable community which in itself is responding constructively to change.

The focus, then, is that the University recognizes the need for continuity and change. We must understand that these two forces will direct the destiny of Susquehanna in the future and, in fact, much of what has happened in recent months is a direct result of this awareness. Clark Kerr, chairman of the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education, succinctly states the impact of change:

The students are changing in several ways. The major over-all change is the new interest of many students in the academic environment. No longer is it taken for granted as the sole preserve of the faculty and administration. . . .

Attention will now turn to equality of opportunity to enter life; to an exploration of ways of improving the many avenues to work and life, and not just higher education alone. This means that higher education will become more a part of a larger universe, rather than being a universe unto itself.

We see this trend in Selinsgrove and much of our effort during the coming months will be geared toward planning for an expanded role. The Board of Directors has indicated its alertness by providing the University with increased flexibility to transcend the "ivory tower" and to provide expanded educational opportunities for its fulltime students and for the community. As far back as 1970 an apparent need of the region was recognized as Susquehanna established an Adult Education and Evening Program. This program was started out of concern for an increased awareness and desire for higher education by the general public and the more demanding educational requirements for advancement in all areas of life. Both credit and non-credit courses are offered within the traditional framework and the program is now also introducing specialized work in independent study. Over 200 residents of the local region are enrolled in some 23 courses and of particular appeal has been a Certificate Program in Management awarded to participants who complete four basic courses in economics, management, human relations, and accounting.

A Report of the Commission on Non-Traditional Study recently reported that the nation's adults want a "different kind of education and a lot more of it than most colleges and universities provide." The Commission recommends a substantial broadening of opportunities in basic, continuing and recurrent education for adults 18 to 60 years of age. In an effort to further expand the offerings of the University and as a means of recognizing additional responsibility in the area of continuing education, the University will start an associate degree program this fall.

As the educational needs of a growing region change, Susquehanna sees the need for a two-year academic program which meets the individual growth and career objective of the student and provides an educational program compatible with the needs of those otherwise qualified students who, for whatever reason, find matriculation at a four-year college impossible. By the same token, the associate degree program provides a patterned and extended opportunity to pursue educational goals and objectives over a period of time and in such a manner so as not to conflict with family or occupational obligations. Known as PACE (Program in Adult Continuing Education) the associate degree may be considered as a terminal degree or, optionally, the student may use it as a base for continuation at the bachelor's level. Evening students, enrolling in from one to three courses per term, can complete the requirements for the Associate in Arts or the Associate in Applied Science (Business Administration) degree in three to five years. The program will incorporate several recent educational innovations including open admissions, independent study, and the granting of credit for "life experiences." Amplifying this latter point, life experience credit may be granted by the University following an evaluation of an applicant's skills acquired on the job or as a result of education acquired individually and independent of formalized instruction.

While recognition is given here to these new and emerging forms of educational service provided by Susquehanna, it is important to note that these supplementary activities in no way detract from the primary purpose of the University — that of providing a sound undergraduate educational experience for our 1400 undergraduates. During the past 15 months much effort has been directed toward completing a self-study for the approaching Middle States evaluation and in further implementing the new 3-3 curriculum. As I have indicated earlier, enrollment has now reached a stable level of 1400 and a faculty-student ratio of 1:14 has been achieved. The Middle States self-study has indicated that the demands on individual faculty members have increased both as a result of the intensified academic schedule and the growth of independent study projects, practicums and off-campus experiences. The members of the faculty are to be commended for their efforts on behalf of the Middle States evaluation and for their continued service to Susquehanna. The growing academic reputation of the University speaks well for the quality of our teaching staff.

Just as the role of the University has broadened over the past several years so, too, has the degree to which the members of the faculty have become involved in professional and educationally-related activities. While an all inclusive list is impossible to compile, I would like to make note of the following:

Professors Richard A. Reiland and Raymond G. Laverdiere of the Accounting Department were actively involved in the regional and local meetings of the Institute of Certified Public Accountants. All four members of the Chemistry Department participated in the various activities of the American Chemical Society. Three members of the Biology Department attended the sessions of the Pennsylvania Academy of Sciences with similar participation by the History Department in their professional meetings. We estimate that University faculty members attended more than 80 professional meetings during the past year. Dr. Donald D. Housley, assistant professor of history, has done extensive research on Snyder County during the Great Depression and his findings have been presented to both the Snyder County Historical Society and a regional history conference held at the Bloomsburg State College. Dr. John H. Longaker, associate professor of history, served as commentator at this latter conference. Dr. Marian E. McKechnie, associate professor of history, spent the summer of 1972 in Latin America.

Dr. James R. Misanin, associate professor of psychology, was a visiting professor at Bucknell University where he taught a graduate course in Learning Theory and also served as editorial consultant and referee for Science and Physiology and Behavior. Dr. Charles E. Lyle, associate professor of psychology, and Boyd Gibson, assistant professor of religion, were instrumental in developing the Baltimore Urban Program under which Susquehanna students can serve an internship in the inner city of Baltimore, Maryland. Dr. Robert M. Bastress, associate professor of education, served as an evaluator for an experimental project on teacher inservice training programs sponsored by the Central Pennsylvania Intermediate Unit. Dr. Charles J. Igoe, associate professor of education, again was named as a consultant to the federal government on the National Student Volunteer and Action Training Programs, and chaired the Central Region Advisory Committee which is preparing a study of existing day care centers for the Pennsylvania Department of Public Welfare.

Dr. Robert L. Bradford, associate professor of political science, once again directed the 1973 Susquehanna at Oxford Program with 24 students from Susquehanna and other institutions participating. The Modern Languages Department began a cooperative venture with Bucknell University in sponsoring a colloquium on Hamlet. Dr. Nancy A. Cairns and Dr. Peter B. Waldeck made presentations at these sessions while Dr. Charles A. Rahter, professor of English, served as moderator for several of the sessions. Dr. Marjorie W. McCune, associate professor of English, is editing Abstracts for 17th Century News to be published this summer by Penn State University.

James B. Steffy, associate professor of music, and Cyril M. Stretansky, assistant professor, conducted band and choral festivals respectively in Pennsylvania, Delaware and Connecticut. Mr. Steffy was also musical director of the 1973 Mexican International Festival of Music. This past summer he also served as chief adjudicator for the Anglo-International Music Festival in Coventry, England. John P. Magnus, associate professor of music, gave voice recitals in Antwerp, Belgium and Graz, Austria.

In addition to the active participation of all faculty in the Middle States evaluation and their involvement in adjusting to the new curriculum, several faculty papers were either published or presented. They include:

Leonard Simons, instructor in biology, presented a paper to the National Association for Research in Science Teaching entitled "The Effectiveness of Written Scripts vs. Audio Tapes in Teaching College Biology." Dr. Wallace J. Growney, associate professor of mathematical sciences, and Dr. Fred A. Grosse, professor of physics, co-authored a paper on "Remote Batch Computing at a Small College" and presented it at the Eastern Computer Machinery Meeting in Toronto, Canada. In addition, Dr. Growney presented two papers at Bloomsburg State College on "Solutions to a Shortest Path Problem" and "An Overview of Operations Research."

Dr. Frederick D. Ullman, assistant professor of mathematical sciences, co-authored a paper accepted by the Journal of Linear Algebra, entitled "A Modified ADI Method for Computing the 'Best Least Squares Solution' of an Incompatible System $(AXI+IXB)x=g$." Dr. Richard H. Lowright's paper, "An Analysis of Factors Controlling Deviations in Hydraulic Equivalence in Some Modern Sands," was published in the Journal of Sedimentary Petrology, and a second paper entitled "Environmental Determination Using Hydraulic Equivalence Studies" has been accepted for publication by the same journal. Dr. Frank W. Fletcher, professor of geology, co-authored a paper published in the Geology Society of America Bulletin entitled "Paleogeography and Paleoclimatology in the Late Devonian of North America."

Dr. Misanin and his students continued to produce significant publications appearing in such journals as Physiological Psychology, Physiology and Behavior, Developmental Psychobiology, Journal of Comparative and Physiological Psychology. Ronald L. Dotterer, instructor in English, has articles accepted for publication in the Journal for Irish Literature. Finally, two articles by Susquehanna faculty members — Dr. Wilhelm Reuning, vice president and dean, and Dr. William A. Russ Jr., professor emeritus of history, appeared in the 1973 edition of Susquehanna University Studies.

As a special incentive to members of the faculty to pursue their professional interests, the University again last summer awarded four Susquehanna University Summer Faculty Research Grants in amounts up to $1000. Recipients this year were: Dr. Igoe, Dr. Lucia S.

Kegler, assistant professor of modern languages, Dr. Lowright, Dr. Neil H. Potter, associate professor of chemistry, and G. Edward Schweikert, assistant professor of psychology.

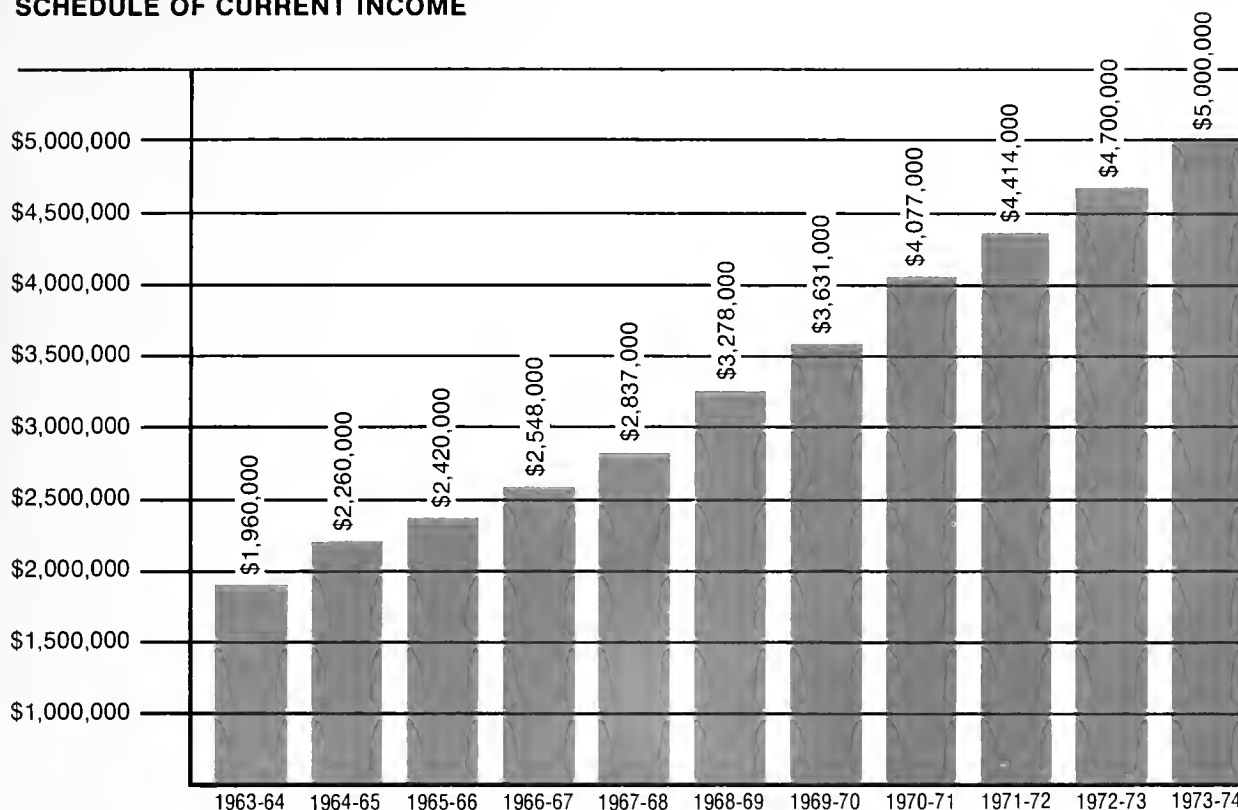

Grants for special projects by faculty members received during the year included: $20,000 to Dr. Fletcher from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare for a project entitled "Ecological Perspective in Decision-Making: A Plan for Action;" $10,000 to Dr. Otto Reimherr, professor of philosophy and religion, to establish an Institute for Studies in Parish Ministry from the Aid Associations for Lutherans; $6000 from the Lutheran Church in America to Dr. Kenneth O. Fladmark, professor of business administration and director of the Evening Program, to develop curriculum content for the associate degree program; and $15,000 to William J. Seaton, instructor in sociology, to conduct a drug and alcohol information program in Snyder and surrounding counties.

Frederick R. Sauter, instructor in business administration; James M. Handlan, assistant professor of mathematical sciences; and James A. Blessing, assistant professor of political science, have been granted sabbatical leaves for the 1973-74 year. All will use the opportunity to either complete their dissertations or their coursework for the doctoral degree. In addition, Dr. Reimherr has been granted sabbatical leave for Term III and Dr. Thomas F. McGrath, professor of chemistry, has been extended a leave of absence to conduct research related to the University's Institute For Environmental Studies.

Four members of the faculty received promotions during the year to become effective in September of 1973. Dr. Fletcher, and Dr. Lawrence A. Ablor of the English Department were promoted to full professor while Charles S. Kunes, instructor in physical education, and Mr. Sauter have been elevated to assistant professors.

SCHEDULE OF CURRENT INCOME

DEVELOPMENT / FINANCES

RECOGNITION HAS BEEN GIVEN to the role of planning at Susquehanna and to the need to involve all elements of the campus in the planning process. In this manner we are able to effect a better understanding by all concerned of our aims and objectives in relation to resource allocation. The financial stringencies of the past several years were imposed with the full cooperation of faculty and staff primarily as a result of total University involvement in the decision-making process. We believe, however, that Susquehanna's willingness to tighten its belt and operate within the framework of a balanced budget in no way diluted the educational program. In talking with many college presidents who have gone through the same agony in recent years, I found that not one has provided solid evidence that cost-cutting at his institution has severely hurt the academic program. This may lead one to conclude that there was excess in most budgets which could be reduced or eliminated without severe repercussions. On the other hand, such action may be taken as a sign of growing sophistication in management and planning at the various institutions. My reaction is that both are correct, but that the latter will carry over and greatly assist us over the long run as we plan for the future.

Current financial pressures do, however, pose a serious long-range problem. With institutions attempting to keep costs within bounds to students — often at a rate below the general level of inflation — we run the risk of soon reaching that point where cost consciousness could begin to impair the quality of the instructional program. Perhaps a college can place too much emphasis on efficiency and reach a point where the relationship of teacher to student is jeopardized by frugality. Sol M. Linowitz, former chairman of Xerox and a trustee of Cornell, has said this: "To a great extent, the very thing which is often referred to as the 'inefficient' or 'unbusinesslike' phase of a liberal arts college's operation is really but an accurate reflection of its true essential purpose." If, in fact, our purpose is to educate by teaching a sense of the past and to offer a perspective on the future, the point may be reached where the relationship of student to teacher may be impeded by staff cutbacks and faculty overloads. Linowitz continues: "In my own experience I have found that the common complaint on our campuses is not that there is too much faculty supervision and companionship, but that there is not enough. One of the things which it seems to me youngsters should and do look for in a college education is a chance to get to know faculty people of eminence and learning and to spend time with them in that close association which is blessedly unique at a college or university." It seems to me that we must continue to be cost conscious, but that much thought and planning is still needed to ensure that our pruning process does not negatively influence the intimate relationship that is Susquehanna's greatest asset.

It is encouraging to us to note that our struggle to maintain quality is greatly assisted by the generosity of alumni and friends. During the year ending June 30, 1973, the University received over $889,000 in gifts and grants. This record for any one year exceeded the 1972 total of $834,000 and the 1971 mark of $632,000. The annual giving program, The Susquehanna University Fund, raised $104,463 and included gifts from 1392 donors. Of this amount, $37,359 was contributed by 192 University Associates — alumni and friends giving a minimum of $100 to annual giving. The future of the University, to a large extent, is in the hands of alumni and friends, and elsewhere in this report we are pleased to publish a listing of those who have given to Susquehanna during the fiscal year just ended.

I am pleased to be able to report that the addition to the library which will transform the building into a campus-wide learning center is progressing ahead of schedule. This $1.3 million project was largely financed through gifts to the recently completed capital campaign and will more than double the size of the present library. The new addition was completed in early August and all books and furnishings from the old section were moved over during the last week in July. The existing building is now under renovation and the entire project is scheduled for completion later this fall. In the meantime, the normal functions of a library will be conducted from the new wing, which includes stack space for 180,000 volumes and study space for more than 400 students. When completed, this structure will provide Susquehanna with a superior facility for housing our educational resources.

Reference was made earlier to the fact that the University's budget was in balance for the third consecutive year during 1972-73. Our budget projections for 1973-74 anticipate an enrollment of 1400 and a budget of $4,995,000. Again, with the help of alumni and friends, the immediate financial future of Susquehanna appears sound. A good deal of our effort over the next year will be devoted to solutions to long-range problems which, by their very nature, will continue to pose a formidable challenge to us all.

MUCH OF THE SUCCESS of the University over the past several years can be attributed to the Admissions Office. Under the direction of Carl M. Moyer, this office has functioned efficiently and has brought outstanding students to the campus. It is with regret that we announce Mr. Moyer's resignation effective September 1 to enter the world of business. His replacement, Paul W. Beardslee, formerly assistant director of admissions at Franklin and Marshall College, brings with him over 10 years of experience in admissions. We welcome Mr. Beardslee to our campus. At the same time, I am sorry to report that Chaplain J. Stephen Bremer is leaving Susquehanna after four years. Pastor Bremer shares our thanks for a most productive effort on behalf of the hundreds of Susquehanna students and faculty who had occasion to work with him. His efforts will remain visible for many years and we wish him well at his new post as senior pastor of Luther Memorial Lutheran Church in Madison, Wisconsin. Dr. Edgar S. Brown Jr., a member of Susquehanna's Religion and Philosophy Department, will serve as Chaplain to the University.

Edward J. Malloy, formerly dean of students at Union College in Schenectady, New York, assumed a similar position at Susquehanna on July 1. He previously served in various administrative capacities at Columbia University and SUNY at Stony Brook. Mr. Malloy replaces Roger W. Turnau who left Susquehanna during the year.

I would like to acknowledge the contribution Dr. Catherine E. Steltz has made to Susquehanna. As dean of women and later as acting dean of students, Dr. Steltz added vitality to the University during her 12 years here. On June 1 she retired and the University gratefully recognizes her contribution.

Proper recognition should be given at this time to Dr. Howard E. DeMott, professor of biology who this year completed 25 years as a member of the Susquehanna faculty. As departmental chairman and head of the University's Long-range Planning Committee, Dr. DeMott has contributed greatly to the growth and development of Susquehanna.

The 1972-73 academic year was not without its sadness. Dr. Scott C. Rea, a member of the Board of Directors since 1960 and a co-founder of Rea and Derick Drug Stores, passed away in early winter. Dr. Rea, who received an honorary degree from Susquehanna, was a primary benefactor of the University.

The Rev. Dr. John W. Harkins, a member of the Class of 1915 and a Board member since 1924, also passed away during the year. As the oldest Board member from point of service, he regularly attended all meetings and added spiritual leadership to the University over a period of some 50 years.

We are pleased to welcome to the Board of Directors as an alumni representative Douglas E. Arthur, Class of 1949, a vice president of Nationwide Insurance Company. Mr. Arthur has long been active in University affairs as a member of the Advisory Council and is currently chairman of The Susquehanna University Fund. John B. Apple, vice president of Butter Krust Baking Company of Sunbury, was re-elected to the Board for a second term as a representative of the Central Pennsylvania Synod.

Henry W. Rozenberg, chairman of the Buildings and Grounds Committee of the Board, has submitted his resignation and will now become an emeritus member. During my tenure here, Dr. Rozenberg's experience as a professional engineer has saved the University countless thousands of dollars and his almost daily visits to the campus represent a degree of Board involvement which is very rare. In June of this year the University recognized his service to the University by awarding him an honorary degree at the Commencement Exercises.

As I have indicated, the University is people. As long as there is a willingness on the part of faculty and staff, Board members and alumni to remain interested in this University, I have no apprehension about Susquehanna's future.

DONORS TO SUSQUEHANNA 1972-1973

THE UNIVERSITY EXPRESSES its appreciation to all who have supported its various programs during the period July 1, 1972 through June 30, 1973. Gifts reported on the following pages cover gifts received during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973. Pledges to the various University programs are not acknowledged here, but payments on such pledges are included. One asterisk denotes a gift of $100 or more; two asterisks, $500 or more. A dagger after the name indicates that a matching gift was received from the donor's employer. A separate list of University Associates, those giving $100 or more to annual giving — The Susquehanna University Fund — is included at the beginning of the donors' section. The following list is comprehensive of all donors to the University.

CAPSULE CAMPAIGN REPORT

THE FINAL RESULTS of the recently concluded Signpost For The Seventies campaign are given below. In all respects, this capital funds drive was the most successful in Susquehanna's history and speaks well for the interest and generosity of alumni and friends. Of the $2,041,000 raised, approximately 50 percent of the funds were used for construction of the library addition scheduled for completion later this fall. The remaining balance has been utilized for endowment and for introducing new educational programs. A breakdown of gifts from major areas:

Fifteen Years—A Tribute

GUSTAVE W. WEBER will complete 15 years as President of Susquehanna University next February 1. His is already the fourth longest tenure of all Susquehanna's 11 chief executives and one of the two or three longest of current Lutheran college presidents in the U.S. There is no need to recount Dr. Weber's leadership and accomplishments here for they have been spread upon the pages of the ALUMNUS issue by issue as they happened, and the results are amply evident in this year's Report.

But it does seem appropriate to pause and pay a brief tribute to Weber the man, who has meant so much to thousands of University students, alumni, and others . . . the aggressive Weber, whose first pronouncement after settling himself at his new desk was that little Susquehanna was going to be first-rate in everything it did, and the practical Weber who recognized that it could nevertheless not attempt to be all things to everyone . . . the entertaining Weber who has a story for every occasion . . . the enthusiastic Weber who has traveled far and wide to be where Susquehannans are . . . the athletic Weber who won nine letters in college, still plays a mean set of tennis, and filled in as football coach for two games some years ago . . . the compassionate Weber whose pastoral concern and help extends into the lives of students, parents, staff and alumni alike . . . the Weber who is always available, always interested, always involved.

He's written many a speech, conducted many a meeting, heard many a concert, seen many a game, and conferred many a degree—including honoraries upon such Senators as Scott and Clark . . . Churchmen as Fry, Marshall, and Krol . . . Governors as Scranton and Shaffer . . . artists and entertainers as Zimbalist.

He observed his fifth anniversary at Susquehanna at a Chapel Service in Seibert Hall and his tenth at a Campus Center dinner where his whole family was present and gathered afterward at Pine Lawn (below).

Have a Happy 15th, Dr. Weber. We're very glad you've been around!

Financial Problems In Higher Education

by LAWRENCE M. ISAACS '43

THE NATIONAL MEDIA have outlined the broad scope of the financial crisis that engulfs higher education. Alumni should be concerned! The threat is real and the dimension of the problem transcends the college itself to affect alumni, parents and others interested in the future of higher education. College administrators and Board members are concerned as educational costs soar and inflation impedes development in many critical areas; parents of students are concerned as they are asked to share a greater burden of this proliferating expense; alumni are concerned and often annoyed with the appeals from Alma Mater for financial support that tend to increase in frequency and become more pleading in nature. It has been indicated, "the trouble is not limited to a few institutions. Nor does it affect only one or two types of institutions. Large colleges, small colleges, state supported and privately supported, the problem faces them all."

Indeed, then, the problem of immediate concern to Susquehanna alumni may seem even more acute in view of the college's limited financial resources and our inability by nature to attract large grants for graduate work and research projects. On second glance, however, Susquehanna's size and modest means may prove an advantage in planning a future of significant worth in higher education. The reader then asks the penetrating question: If the well endowed institutions like those in the Ivy League face annual operating deficits and program cut-backs, how can the Susquehannas and other small liberal arts colleges hope to survive the pressures during the years immediately ahead? Since our needs are less complex than most larger institutions, our budget has remained balanced through prudent fiscal management. Our commitment to the undergraduate has been reaffirmed and since teaching the undergraduate is Susquehanna's sole obligation, priorities can be more easily established and made more flexible in nature.

Mr. Isaacs, Development Committee chairman for the Susquehanna University Board of Directors, is vice president of the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Corporation and lives in Fox Point, Wis. He previously held high offices in Bethlehem Steel and RCA. A football quarterback as an undergraduate, he is married to the former Louise Kresge '45.

One concerned with the operations of a small college like Susquehanna must remain essentially optimistic. It is our nature to do so and would be defeatist to do otherwise. The small private colleges have survived crises in the past, and it would seem realistic to project the view that those dedicated to their task can again survive this current crisis. If Susquehanna does not survive as a private liberal arts college, it will be through default, with only the college itself to blame. Thus, an analysis of the situation as it pertains to Susquehanna may be helpful in outlining why this small college can and must remain a force in higher education during the years ahead. To achieve this, Susquehanna must chart a course thoroughly, realize its limitations, and give priority to its stated objectives.

In my role as chairman of the Development Committee of the Board of Directors, I believe the concept of total University development implies the mobilization of the various University constituencies in support of the institution's objectives and goals. The success of any University program is predicated on that institution's ability to, a) formulate meaningful educational objectives which have substance and which can be interpreted as the commitment of the University to higher education, b) translate these objectives into viable educational programs which can be realistically perceived by our various publics and, c) generate enthusiasm and support for such objectives and programs among faculty, staff, Board members, alumni and friends. Anything short of meeting these three basic institutional objectives means sacrificing proportionately the success and support of the development program.

In this day and age it should be emphasized that those institutions remaining strong are the ones cognizant of the need to explore in depth the reasons for their existence and to outline objectively plans for the future. The key factor here is a willingness to be realistic in developing the potential of the institution and to take prudent risks in introducing new and innovative educational programs. It would seem to me that only those institutions willing to accept change as a way of life and gearing themselves for change will be able to attract the attention necessary to survive.

FUTURE PROGRAM CONSIDERATIONS

It may follow, then, that in outlining future programs for Susquehanna the following must be kept in mind: First, it must be realized that there are certain financial limits within which Susquehanna must plan an educational program. With an endowment of about $2 million, the University's resources must be considered modest in relation to many more wealthy institutions. An operating budget of some $4.9 million further defines the limits within which Susquehanna can operate. While modest, these resources can be sufficient to allow the University to do a good job and to compete for undergraduate students, assuming that objectives are defined and priority is given to what is important educationally.

Second, the role of planning and evaluation must be brought to education just as these are cardinal concepts in business. Susquehanna's Long-Range Planning Committee, comprised of faculty, administration and students, submitted an initial report four years ago. The importance of a long-range plan and its influence on institutional aims and objectives influence all elements of operation — enrollment, budget, programs, fund-raising. As a result, objectives must be set in accordance with the realistic potential of the best contribution that the institution can make to higher education. Such a committee's awareness of trends in higher education must be understood. Programs should be devised which will effectively utilize the resources of the University and result in a greater productivity of both staff and facilities. Certain trends would seem to indicate that both productivity and accountability will be key words in higher education during the latter part of the 1970s.

While those attuned to business speak of productivity in a classical sense and as a means of offsetting inflation and lowering the per-unit cost of production, one wonders if the same yardstick can be applied with corresponding results in education. The answer defies a simple solution, since the quality of the educational product is not easily measured in terms of dollars and cents. How, for example, can one realistically measure in dollars the intangible impact of the intimate faculty/student relationship on the small-college campus? The challenge here is to avoid production line economies that can jeopardize educational quality but, at the same time, be alert to new teaching techniques and programs which bring economies while protecting against any deterioration in educational quality. It is therefore incumbent upon faculty and staff to evaluate new methods and techniques for presenting material, and in this regard they should be held accountable for their performance.

For these reasons, planning is important and it is hoped that the Long-Range Planning Committee can continue to play an increasingly more prominent role in the University's development. It is important to note that recommendations already received by the Board from the Long-Range Planning group under the direction of Dr. Howard DeMott, professor of biology, have been implemented by the Board. Such recommendations include: an enrollment of 1400, establishing budget guidelines and priorities, evaluating the need for an expanded library, and presenting a plan for curriculum revision. The involvement of faculty, staff and students in the planning process becomes more acute as the necessity arises to review present programs and consider new opportunities. In short, the function of planning must be pursued aggressively to the point where it has meaning and validity in determining limits and objectives. Planning must be campuswide in scope!

Third, the small college must seek out new avenues of support from its constituents. Communication, a key word so often heard, yet misunderstood, continues as a primary ingredient in success. Simply to communicate well will not bring increased support, since the programs and objectives that one communicates to alumni and friends are the determinant factors upon which philanthropic decisions are based. Thus, the key is to offer a program worthy of support and then set out to make certain all constituents understand this program. To assure financial stability, our goals must stimulate more alumni to participate in the affairs of Susquehanna, and we would hope that the percentage of alumni giving annual support to Susquehanna can double to 50 percent over the next several years. Indeed it must, if we are to remain a viable institution!

Certainly it should be no embarrassment to say that Susquehanna makes no claim of having achieved "academic excellence." The University is not sufficiently endowed with resources to carry on elaborate research or graduate programs; nor should this be the University's function, since such tasks should best be left to the larger institutions. To attempt such programs in any form would be to dilute the educational product at the expense of the undergraduate. Realizing this, most feel that Susquehanna should remain a college of controlled size where emphasis is placed on the undergraduate and on his or her needs. Teaching is paramount, and the continued ability of the professor to stimulate students will be the key to Susquehanna's success in future years. The Board of Directors and administration can help provide facilities, equipment and other support elements, but only the teacher can provide the student with an enthusiastic learning experience.

CURRENT ACHIEVEMENTS

Relevant teaching implies an awareness of new and modern techniques and a willingness to engender programs of interest to students. Believing in the need to be alert to new programs, the University has attempted to foster a climate in which faculty can experiment with new ideas and modes of education. The establishment in 1970 of an Interdisciplinary Environmental Studies Program with an emphasis on utilizing the location of the University in a rural area to provide field work experience for students is a case in point. Transcending departmental lines, the program provides science majors with an opportunity to combine study in their major fields with an ecologic perspective. This program has received wide recognition and attracted over $300,000 in outside support, most notably from the National Science Foundation.

The desire for off-campus learning experiences by many students has prompted Susquehanna to establish internship programs in disciplines such as psychology, sociology, computer science, accounting, business, and biology. Here a student is able to supplement his classroom education with a supervised internship experience in a vocationally allied field. (How much better prepared many of us would have been had we had the opportunity to "test" our vocational interests as part of our undergraduate education!) Even though this experience is "external," the role of the teacher is critical in designing an internship that supplements the classroom work. If a student is to spend ten weeks of his undergraduate time off the campus, the faculty member must tailor an individual work-study experience that warrants academic credit. With the emerging trend toward more off-campus and career experiences, the professor is challenged to find ways to provide such opportunities and to make the educational experience even more stimulating for students. These points tend to emphasize the individualistic nature of today's education and the added burden of responsibility on faculty and staff to develop sound programs.

What has been accomplished in recent years at Susquehanna has been planned. The Development Committee of the Board recognizes the contribution of the Long-Range Planning Committee and gives approval to its efforts. In authorizing the recently concluded capital campaign, the directors gave emphasis to two pressing requirements as outlined in the long-range plan: the need for new library facilities and the need for endowment. Our success in generating subscriptions of over $2 million for this campaign leads us to believe that some success is being made in effectively communicating the University's objectives and programs to our constituents. As a result of the campaign and the gifts from over 1500 alumni and friends, more than $500,000 has been added to endowment and we can look forward to the completion of an expanded and modernized library this winter.

The planning process, however, does not end here. Other important needs are currently under evaluation by the Board of Directors. It is safe to say that, with the exception of the need for expanded physical education facilities, the future emphasis will shift from buildings to programs and other more intangible but equally important matters. Primary emphasis will be given to elevating faculty salaries in an effort to remain competitive in the marketplace. Additional consideration will be given to introducing new and vital programs such as those outlined earlier in this report, and the overall goal is to provide a more effective atmosphere for achieving the educational goals of the University.

Emphasis will be on change — not change for its sake alone, but calculated changes that will bring greater effectiveness to the educational program. Realizing its potential, Susquehanna gears itself to meeting the demands of the future and effectively communicating its programs to alumni and friends. Hopefully, more alumni will assist the University in meeting this challenge, since, after all, all of us have much to gain by sharing in Susquehanna's success.

Many Honored at Opening Convocation

Opening Convocation on September 9 marked the beginning of Susquehanna's 116th year. In the absence of President Weber—who was speaking and receiving an honorary Litt.D. at Thiel College—Dr. Erle I. Shobert II '35, vice chairman of the SU Board, presided. Above: honorary degree recipients Krister Stendahl, dean of the Harvard Divinity School, LL.D., and Mary Weimer Moffitt '28, professor of education at Queens College, Pd.D., pose with Shobert. At left: Mrs. Frances MacCuish, director of placement, is given the Wilkinson Award for Administrative Excellence and Stanley B. Williams, assistant professor of economics, is named Professor of the Year by Rick Walker '74, president of the Interfraternity Council. Karen Ann Havrilko '74 of Shenandoah, Pa. received the Lindback Award as a student of great promise to become a valuable citizen. Jerry S. Bassett '75 of Danville, Pa. won the Stine-Robison Mathematical Prize, and 142 students were named University Scholars. Below: New Testament scholar Stendahl, who delivered the Convocation Address, relaxes during a dialog with students.

Recipient of an M.S. in chemical engineering from Louisiana State University and later an honorary Sc.D. from Carthage College, he operated a sugar factory in Cuba, 1913-1920. He then taught in the Sunbury schools before succeeding his father, the late Dr. Thomas C. Houtz '86 as head of Susquehanna's Science Department. While an undergraduate, John captained the 1907 football team as a 130-lb. quarterback, also played basketball and sang in the Glee Club. He became a widely-respected teacher and surveyor, an active sportsman, Boy Scout committeeman, and organizer of the Selinsgrove Community Center. His widow is the former Arline Fisher Bedeaux '37 and a stepdaughter is Claudette Bedeaux Jobson x'59.

THE STORY OF NASEEM

NASEEM MOMIN '77 is a bright-eyed pre-medical student from Elizabethville, Pa. She talks easily and animatedly about her experiences of the past year and a half . . .

Naseem's family is Asian and lived in Uganda in East Africa when in the summer of 1972 General Idi Amin, the Ugandan Chief of State, ordered that all non-citizen Asians must leave the country in three months. There were some 80,000 such persons at the time; only a thousand or two were permitted to stay and are presumably still there. Of those expelled, nearly all have now taken up permanent residences in a score of countries under a mammoth United Nations resettlement program.

While many of them were British citizens and were settled in Commonwealth countries, others were of undetermined nationality and were received in Western Europe, Japan, and the United States. Numerous social service agencies were involved, including Tressler-Lutheran Service Associates, with which Susquehanna cooperates in several volunteer projects. Tressler assisted in finding places for nearly a third of the first group of 1000—among them, Naseem's father and mother—who came to this country in November of 1972.

A month earlier, Naseem and her older sister Zarina, a chemistry teacher, had been sent to England to stay with friends until suitable arrangements could be made to reunite the family. Nurmohamed Momin, their father, was a high school mathematics teacher back home. He had held a British passport until Uganda became independent in 1962 and he accepted citizenship in the new country. But he was the only member of the family in that favored status and, if they were to continue life together, he had to leave too. He is now a chemist for TRW Inc. Naseem came to America last February and her sister followed in April. Zarina is doing substitute teaching in Harrisburg.

In Uganda, Naseem almost finished her "A-level" examinations, which she describes as about one year ahead of U.S. high school graduation. At Susquehanna, she earned a 3.0 grade point average (taking calculus, chemistry, and Colonial American history) in the fall term. She's well aware of the competition for entrance into medical school here, and determined to justify the special scholarship she holds from the University—which is one of two for students from Uganda, with the other held by Nazmuddin Jiwani '77, a young man now living in Akron, Pa.

SUSQUEHANNA ALUMNUS extends a warm welcome to these new Americans and wishes them successful academic careers as well as happy and rewarding lives. — EDITOR

No. 2

ON OUR COVER: Dean Wilhelm Reuning discusses the scheduling of courses with freshman coed Naseem Momin, one of two displaced students from Uganda who have resettled in central Pennsylvania and entered Susquehanna last September. For more about Naseem and her family, read the opposite page.

Inside, too, our readers should find some items of more than usual interest to help while away this raw and gasless winter—especially the article on the arts, page 4, and the Report from the Class of 1973, page 13. Do enjoy this issue, and a Happy 1974 to all Susquehanna alumni, their families and their friends!

THE ARTS AND THE LIBERAL ARTS

MOST PEOPLE who have attended a college like Susquehanna would agree that, to be really complete, a liberal arts education does not consist merely of requirements listed in the college catalog. Indeed, the "liberal arts" idea implies a lot of other things and experiences, too, including extra-classroom activities and some exposure to serious music, theatre, dance, and other areas of the performing and visual arts. Not many would accept the conclusion of Hermann Goering, who is supposed to have said, "Every time I hear someone talk of culture, I reach for my revolver."

Particularly in the last decade or so, many colleges have expressed their belief in the importance of cultural activities by developing or expanding their performing arts programs and constructing new theatres or complexes for the fine arts. Susquehanna University's Artist Series has kept pace with this movement by more than doubling its attendance during the past three years alone, primarily through the booking of such fine events as the Pennsylvania Ballet, the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, actor Vincent Price, the Goldovsky Opera Company, and folksinger Pete Seeger.

Visiting artists and lecturers have, of course, appeared at Susquehanna for many years—not only under Artist Series auspices, but also with the sponsorship of academic departments, student organizations, and other groups. But recent successes in presenting more variety and thus attracting larger audiences would certainly not have been possible without the completion in 1966 of Susquehanna's magnificent Chapel Auditorium.

While music courses were first offered on campus in 1882 and recitals and concerts were part of the college scene before the turn of the century, the establishment of a separate department—the Conservatory of Music—in 1900 gave impetus to the desire to import culture from outside the college community. The practice of inviting artists to campus is generally credited to E. Edwin Sheldon, who came to Susquehanna in 1901, organized the Susquehanna Musical Union, and arranged extensive tours for the Glee Club. According to The Story of Susquehanna University, "music experienced a Renaissance when E. Edwin Sheldon was appointed Director of the Conservatory."

Assistant librarian and archivist M. Jane Schnure '47 has compiled a comprehensive list which indicates that a program of visiting artists was begun in the 1903-04 academic year with recitals by Pauline Woltmann, contralto; Corrinne Wiest-Anthony, soprano; and Georges Dundas, tenor. An average of five or six such programs were sponsored each year for the next two decades. Most were recitals by individual performers, interspersed with an occasional lecturer or small chamber music group, and the programs were usually held in a large room on the main floor of Gustavus

Adolphus Hall (destroyed by fire in 1964) since there was no larger public room available. At some time during this period, these programs came to be known collectively as the "Star Course," a nostalgic term still used by some Artist Series patrons.

In 1925 an auditorium was added to Seibert Hall, a women's dormitory built in 1901. The auditorium served as a chapel and also provided new stage facilities which enabled the Star Course to present its first play, "Cotters Saturday night," in the 1925-26 season. After a lapse of several years, "The Violin Maker of Cremona" was given in 1930, and the Hedgerow Players of Philadelphia performed at Susquehanna in 1934, 1935, and 1937. The famous bandleader Edwin Franko Goldman, who apparently had been guest conductor for high school band festivals at the University some years earlier, also appeared as a lecturer in 1935. Occasionally, cultural programs were scheduled in the gymnasium because of its greater seating capacity; this was the setting in 1938 for a concert by the Kryl Symphony Orchestra.

During the '40s and early '50s Star Course planners were fortunate and/or farsighted enough to include some soloists who have since become familiar to concertgoers everywhere. Bernard Greenhouse, who gave a cello recital at Susquehanna in 1940 as a very young man, has since gained considerable recognition not only as a solo performer, but also as one-third of the Beaux Arts Trio of New York—their performance on campus was one of the real highlights of the 1972-73 Artist Series. Pianist Leonard Pennario played at the University in 1946 and Ted Shawn, who became one of the great figures in American dance during his partnership with Ruth St. Denis and later as the founder of the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival in Massachusetts, presented a lecture-recital in 1950.

Galen Deibler, now associate professor of music and an outstanding pianist himself, became chairman of the Artist Series Committee (now Public Events Committee, with increased responsibilities) in 1960, and it is probably more than coincidental that during his tenure some truly first-rate musicians were included in the Artist Series. The Juilliard String Quartet and mezzo-soprano Jennie Tourel appeared in 1961-62, actor Basil Rathbone and pianist Eugene Istomin in 1962-63, and baritone Hermann Prey and the New York Pro Musica in 1964-65.

Deibler recently recalled that those Artist Series events were divided between Seibert Hall and Alumni Gymnasium, with the latter having to be especially set up for each program with a temporary stage and rows of chairs on the playing floor. The only exception was the Jennie Tourel concert, staged in the auditorium of the Selinsgrove State School which, for acoustical reasons, was not used again.

As Susquehanna's enrollment began to grow substantially in the early 1960s, the need for a larger auditorium was very evident. Daily chapel services were still being held at the time and attendance was required. When the student body outgrew Seibert, simultaneous services were scheduled in Benjamin Apple Theatre. The stage facilities in Seibert, while adequate for soloists and small groups, were too small for the kinds of other attractions—such as dance and theatre companies or symphony orchestras—sought by the Artist Series Committee. Even the University's own musical performing groups were forced to use temporary stage extensions for their concerts. Dressing room space was virtually nonexistent. Apple was a tiny theatre, ideal for the educational program but very limited both in stage and seating capacity for all but a minimum of public uses.

Dr. Gustave Weber, who had come to Susquehanna as President in 1959, thought long and hard about this obvious need. A church college without a real chapel, a fine music school without proper places to perform, a campus community eager to see and hear the artists of the world—but unsatisfactory facilities for presenting them. Was there some kind of building which could respond to this several-sided need all under one roof? After all, the future of required chapel was in some doubt even in those days, and Susquehanna was hardly affluent enough to support a separate chapel building which would be used only a few hours a week.

Some solution had to be found. Board and staff members considered the problem too. The Lutheran Church with which the University identifies is a liturgical church. The worship center should be visually uplifting and provide for flexibility in the forms of worship and the presentation of fine music from the rich heritage of the church. A portable altar to be rolled out for services would not suffice.

Dr. Weber confesses that at one point he was trying to visualize a large auditorium with a stage at one end and a chancel at the other, with seats which would rotate or have adjustable backs—perhaps similar to the old streetcar or commuter-train seats which could be made to face either way depending upon the direction of the particular trip. His thoughts crystallized, however, at the New York World's Fair in 1963 when he saw the Chrysler pavilion with its large, rotating exhibit platform for automobiles. There were such things as revolving stages; why not one with a chancel on half of it? The idea of a Chapel Auditorium with a revolving stage now began to take serious shape.

"We met with the people from Chrysler and when the Fair was dismantled they were willing to give us the rotating platform," Dr. Weber recalls. "But after more consideration, it appeared to be somewhat too small for our purposes and the cost of taking it apart, moving it to Selinsgrove and reassembling it would have been more than $250,000."

The question of seating capacity was another key factor in the design of a new building. The first figure was 750 seats. As the planning progressed and projections of future enrollment kept going higher and higher, the proposed seating capacity was increased to 1000, then to 1250, and finally to 1500 (actually, 1506). Inclusion of the circular revolving stage, and the fact that curved walls do not trap sound to hinder acoustics, were major influences in the final design of the circular structure.

Ground was broken for the new Chapel Auditorium in the summer of 1965, a datestone ceremony was held in the fall, and the building was dedicated on November 6, 1966. Since it was thought unusual for a college to have an auditorium with a seating capacity greater than its student enrollment, some skeptics doubted that it would ever be filled except for commencement exercises. These doubts were soon dispelled, however, as the dedication itself attracted two over-capacity crowds—one for a morning service and the other for the afternoon convocation—and every seat was occupied for the first Christmas Candlelight Festival the following month.

In his dedication address—a stirring and scholarly appeal for integrity in the arts—actor Efrem Zimbalist Jr. had cited Chapel Auditorium as a place “where worship and the performing arts may flourish together as they were wont to do of old.” This flourishing together began almost immediately when the new facility became the setting for several Artist Series events, band concerts, and the annual spring musical formerly presented in a large circus tent. The auditorium was frequently full for a variety of religious and secular programs including conventions and other outside rentals. The largest Artist Series attendance was a standing-room-only crowd of nearly 2000, not counting several hundred who had to be turned away, for the Royal Winnipeg Ballet on February 15, 1968. It is said that this was the first appearance ever in Snyder or Northumberland county of a full ballet company.

But the real test was yet to come. Up until the fall of 1968, all Artist Series events and most student performances were open to the public free of charge. It remained to be seen whether the general public was willing to buy tickets. Traditionally, Artist Series financing was derived solely from student activities fees; by charging admission to the public, hopefully, sufficient additional funding could be secured to make it possible for the committee to book more attractive programs. So, the sale of tickets was initiated and special rates were established for season subscriptions. After an admittedly slow start, and given a year or so to turn the extra money into bigger attractions, Artist Series attendance in 1970-71 averaged more than 1000 persons per program and people from Selinsgrove and the surrounding communities were coming out in truly significant numbers, attracted by such programs as the musical “You’re a Good Man Charlie Brown,” the Eastman Philharmonic, and Emlyn Williams in his portrayal of Charles Dickens.

The sheer size of the new stage encouraged a wider variety of programs, too, since it can accommodate a full orchestra, large ballet or theatre company—an impossibility in any other facility on campus except the gymnasium with its very poor acoustics. The public’s response to ticket sales has definitely helped to fund the larger and more expensive attractions. In 1969-70 the income from this source totaled $950, but in 1972-73 the figure had increased to $6000.

The ability of the Artist Series to draw both campus and community audiences creates a very favorable situation, in the opinion of Clyde Lindsley, Campus Center director and manager of the Public Events Committee since 1969. “Since an average Artist Series event attracts somewhere between 700 and 1000 people from the campus, we have between 500 and 800 seats to sell in the community, and this ticket income represents most of the increase in our budget. Also, Student Senate has continued to strongly support the Artist Series in contrast to the state of affairs on some campuses where cultural funds have been cut. Our student attendance has increased because we can provide tickets to them at no charge beyond the activities fee they've already paid."

Cellist Bernard Greenhouse with violinist Isidore Cohen and pianist Menahem Pressler in the Beaux Arts Trio and (below) the colorful and exciting Fiesta Mexicana.

During the past few years the Artist Series has included folksingers Pete Seeger and Mike Cooney, the Preservation Hall Jazz Band of New Orleans, and a touring company of "Last of the Red Hot Lovers." These programs have helped to boost student enthusiasm while at the same time sparking some conversation as to what constitutes "culture" and what is entertainment.

"Part of the recent success of the Artist Series is due to the fact that we have tried to present contemporary programs like folk and jazz in addition to serious music, theatre, and dance," Lindsley adds. "Several years ago I heard an interesting talk by Prof. Charles Dodrill of Otterbein College. He suggested that too many campus cultural committees fail to present any 20th century programs like jazz or Broadway musicals, which are very much a part of our culture and are often the only 'cultural' things familiar to students—the primary audience we are trying to attract. People tend to shy away from the unfamiliar, and so each year we try to include at least one program which will have wide appeal for S.U. students, hoping that we can thereby interest them in attending the other programs too. The students are not only our primary constituency now, but with others of their generation they will make up the concert audiences of tomorrow."

The appeal of a varied cultural series is important to surrounding communities as well as the campus. The National Research Center of the Arts has recently published a study of public attitudes toward the arts and cultural participation in New York State entitled Arts and the People. It demonstrates that there is greater desire for artistic opportunities by a greater number of people than professional arts administrators ever thought, and indicates that those who seem most concerned about the lack of "cultural dimension" in their lives are those with a high school education or less, in the middle and lower economic levels. These people often feel that the arts are inaccessible to them and that existing cultural facilities and programs do not welcome their attendance or participation.

Susquehanna has been working hard to change this attitude and welcome area people to events in Chapel Auditorium. About three weeks before each Artist Series performance, a student delivers posters and flyers to more than 60 banks, record stores, libraries, and other locations in Selinsgrove and surrounding communities, and a mailing is sent to a list of area persons which has grown from about 500 names to almost 4000 in four years. Ads are also placed with newspapers and radio stations, and this year three local stations began using a weekly taped announcement of University events which are open to the public in the upcoming week.

These efforts have been very effective as the 1973-74 Artist Series is pulling more people from the community than ever before. Season ticket sales reached 334—more than double the best previous total—and in the opening program, a touring company of the hit musical "Godspell" played to two capacity crowds on Saturday afternoon and evening, September 22. The National Shakespeare Company then drew more than 1400, including about 40 percent of the student body, for its performance of "As You Like It" on November 5. Hundreds of people are looking forward to the return engagement of the Royal Winnipeg Ballet on Tuesday, March 12. The season's other attractions are the Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra on January 25 and the University of Illinois Jazz Ensemble on March 23.

William Dawson, executive director of the Association of College and University Concert Managers (which Susquehanna's Lindsley serves as a member of the Board of Directors), says, "Arts and the People negates the common attitude that the arts are for only a select few, and gives support to the belief that the live performance has greater potential popular support than television or movies. It indicates a potential audience, as yet unserved, to whom our programs should have interest and value."

Susquehanna's experience in Selinsgrove certainly bears out this view. The benefits deriving from the Artist Series—and other lectures and performances too—are not only a vital ingredient of the liberal arts education, but an important part of the cultural life of the area as well. The Public Events Committee of faculty, students, and administrators, currently chaired by Paul E. Klingensmith of the English Department, is to be commended for its efforts and success in bringing distinguished talent to campus for the enrichment of all.

TAILGATING AT HOMECOMING '73

SUSQUEHANNA'S first scheduled Tailgate Picnic was rained out at Homecoming '72, but this year was different. The weather was fine and several hundred persons settled down for a great pre-game meal, with the Marching Brass and Percussion providing appropriate music for the occasion. Crusader tailgaters haven't yet reached the level of enthusiasm seen at Penn State or the Minnesota Vikings' stadium, but bigger things are on the way.

Meanwhile, the Susquehanna soccer team garnered a good bit of enthusiasm for itself—with a large crowd on the sidelines—as it defeated Upsala College 5-1 on its way to its best season ever (read more about those guys in SU Sports, page 28). That's freshman Don Schreiber of Rumson, N.J. getting a crack at the ball. The cross country harriers won over York 21-40 and the football team bowed to Western Maryland 14-11.

The Homecoming Court was a winner, too, and included (above): Lady-in-waiting Zona Weimer '74 of Millerstown, Pa.; Queen Carol Kehler '74 of Ashland, Pa.; Karen Wells '75 of Stowe, Pa.; Patricia Osterhout '76 of Murray Hill, N.J.; Lorraine Miller '77 of Haledon, N.J. Queen Carol is a political science major and president of Alpha Delta Pi sorority.

President Weber inducts Bob Pittello '51 into the Sports Hall of Fame while Bill Moore '63 awaits his turn and (at right) congratulates Dan Travalet '66, the third inductee.

After-game features this year were a Foam On The Range party at the home of Jim '64 and Toby Brodich Skinner '63 and an evening concert by Lester Flatt and the Nashville Grass.

FROM THE CLASS OF 1973

ONCE AGAIN, THE ALUMNUS is pleased to present a firsthand report on the activities and whereabouts of Susquehanna's most recent graduates. The Class of 1973 totals 289 men and women, of whom 206 responded to the Alumni Office query. As is generally and understandably the case, the majority are living in the Middle Atlantic States—103 in Pennsylvania, 31 in New Jersey, and 17 in New York. Twenty-three other states are represented as places of residence and three of the '73ers live in other countries. As for their current occupations: 65 are in business, banking or insurance; 50 are doing graduate work; 34 are teaching; 23 are in accounting. Only 6 are full-time homemakers, 6 in service occupations, and 3 in the armed forces. The variety of other occupational fields reported includes music, science, legal work, politics, and computer programing.

THE LOCAL SCENE

by GEORGE TAMKE

WE'RE WELL AWARE that many alumni are interested in what goes on in Selinsgrove. After all, they lived here for four years while they were students and some developed a real affection for the town and the area. From time to time the ALUMNUS has published items about local activities, but we're going to try something new by using this column to share with our readers things they might like to know about the local scene.

We'll keep the column flexible—some subjects may be directly connected with Susquehanna and some may not. And it probably won't be written by the same person every time. We have several people in mind who would make great guest columnists and we intend to use them if we can! Meanwhile . . .

A good way to start is to take a little tour downtown. You'll have to make your own reference points, depending upon just when you lived here yourself, but it is clear that a lot has changed in the old boro which was founded by Major Anthony Selin, a Swiss soldier-of-fortune under Washington, in 1787. For our part, we've certainly seen many changes since we first came nearly 15 years ago. In fact, so many Market Street stores have been replaced with others, and replaced again, that we won't even try to document them all. Among the more striking, however: gone are the A&P and Weis Markets, the movie theatre, Troxell's Hardware, Mary Penny's, Lyons, Snyder's, Snavely's, Melrose Restaurant, Higgins, Cole's Drugs, Learn's, and others. In their stead we find such establishments as an enlarged Rea & Derick's and Ebert's 5 & 10, Western Auto, The Lowly Clothier, Susquehanna Hobbies, J. Kleinbauer Gentlemen's Furnishings, Kay Koch Feminine Finery, Joan Harvey's Gift Shop, Davis Drugs, The Shambeau, and a couple of small boutiques. Some of these places of business were illustrated in the ALUMNUS a year ago (Winter issue 1973, "Selinsgrove's White Christmas"). Things do look different on Market Street, and they look better all the time as the merchants and the planners follow their 18th century styling in construction and renovations.

Just off Market Street, the boro has its own new building on the site of the old Pine Street School—it includes the community library too, which used to be in the Masonic building. Up at Market and Mill, St. Paul's United Church of Christ occupies its brand new sanctuary on the same spot where the old one stood. The Lutherans, if you haven't heard, finally consolidated First and Trinity churches three years ago and voted to name the new congregation Sharon, which was the name of the original Lutheran church begun in 1790 and split by a doctrinal squabble in 1843. Sharon is using both buildings—one for six months and the other for six months—while a study committee examines the program and the needs for the future.

Weis Markets has a big store at the corner of Broad Street and Route 522, next to the present elementary school, which is next to the high school. A new middle school is currently under construction to the west and will complete the public school complex or, as they refer to it these days, the campus.

And on the Isle of Que, Sheetz Market is no more. Completely devastated by the summer flood of '72, it never reopened—despite the fact that the town fathers had already reserved space on the zoning ordinance map for relocating the market upon its removal. You see, the old structure was right in the path of the proposed Routes 11 & 15 bypass and was to be razed anyway. Ah, the Bypass . . .

When we first arrived in town in 1959, we learned that a bypass around Selinsgrove had been in the discussion stage for some years and there were those who thought that construction was "just around the corner." The highway north and south of the boro was first-class and, as part of a major traffic artery, carried as many as 50,000 vehicles a day at peak periods. Selinsgrove's narrow Market Street (it's about two miles from the bridge over Penn's Creek down to the junction of Route 35) was a bottleneck for through traffic north-south and south-north. Townspeople, of course, are as much concerned about the movement of in-town traffic as they are with the bottleneck. And the hundreds of trailer trucks which pass through each day don't help the condition of roads and foundations of buildings either. Everyone—residents and merchants alike—has looked forward to the bypass for a long time.

After additional years of engineering and design studies and surveys of traffic patterns, it was proposed that the Selinsgrove bypass begin just south of town and proceed around the west side of the boro limits, connecting to the north with a new highway west of heavily built-up 11 & 15 (this section is called "the Golden Strip") and provide access to a new bridge across the Susquehanna River, replacing the Bainbridge Street bridge to Sunbury. Thus, the bypass would become an important link in the entire connector system between the new Interstate highways.

The goals have not been changed, but the route has. The plan which was finally adopted calls for the Selinsgrove bypass—beginning at the same point near the 35 junction—to cross over to the Isle of Que and proceed along the old canal bed, crossing back to 11 & 15 just north of the Penns Creek bridge. This plan was funded last year. It is said that it displaces fewer persons and will cost far less than the western route, although the link-up to the north will now necessitate an overpass. Designs for the next stages have been approved but no funds have yet been appropriated. In the case of the Selinsgrove section, the state has purchased the needed properties and clearing of the land has begun. A few months ago we were thinking it was in the bag.

Now we're wondering. In light of present fuel shortages and since highway construction funds derive chiefly from gasoline tax revenues, to say nothing of a national reordering of priorities—quite properly, under the circumstances—the Selinsgrove bypass just might become as elusive as ever.

Retiring senior Co-captains Eickhoff and Atkinson of the impressive 1973 SU soccer team. The Potter-coached Crusader kickers were seeded first in the ECAC Southern Regional tourney.

SU Sports

by RON BERKHEIMER

SUSQUEHANNA HAD another disappointing year in football, but the soccer team made its first appearance in a post-season tournament and the cross country team rebounded strongly from its poor record in 1972. Moreover, the outlook for both the basketball and wrestling teams was good as the winter season got underway.

Defense carried the soccer team to a 6-2-4 regular-season record and a berth in the ECAC (Eastern College Athletic Conference) Southern Regional tournament. In fact, the Crusaders were seeded first in a four-team field rounded out by Franklin & Marshall, Kutztown State and Wilkes.

However, the defense collapsed in the tournament itself as Susquehanna lost to Wilkes 5-3 in the opening round. F & M, which hosted the tournament, won it by beating Kutztown 1-0 and Wilkes 2-1. There was no consolation game.

Susquehanna, a young team, looked inept in the season opener, a 7-0 loss to Elizabethtown. But the Crusaders settled down and posted 6 wins and 4 ties in their next 10 games. During the streak, they posted five shutouts and gave up a total of only six goals. Individual defensive standouts were fullbacks Rich Eickhoff (Morrisville, Pa.), Bill Dorman (Rutherford, N.J.) and Jim Schrader (Livingston, N.J.) and goalie Chris Blackmon (New Britain, Pa.).

Included in the streak were a scoreless tie with a Gettysburg team which had previously tied Elizabethtown and a

This is Ron Berkheimer's 34th and last SU Sports column in Susquehanna Alumnus. Ron will be missed at Susquehanna—he came in September of 1962 and took over as director of public information a year later. On January 1, 1974 he assumed a similar position at Juniata College. Besides issuing literally thousands of news releases during his years in Selinsgrove, Ron wrote 15 by-lined feature stories for this magazine and was acting editor in 1967-68. He came to know many Susquehanna alumni intimately and we know that they as well as we wish him well in his new association with our sister college in Huntingdon, Pennsylvania. And we thank him for his many contributions to our program here. —EDITOR

1-0 victory over Bucknell. In retrospect, the Bucknell win must be considered the highlight of the season. The Crusaders had never beaten Bucknell before in soccer and when they did it this year they picked on one of the best teams the Bisons ever had. Bucknell went on to post a regular-season record of 9-2-1 while winning its section of the Middle Atlantic Conference University Division.

Susquehanna also whipped Wilkes 3-1 in a regularly scheduled game and played well enough, offensively, to beat the Colonels in the tournament. In the tournament loss, the Crusaders led Wilkes in shots, 10-7, and in corner kicks, 8-2.

The Crusaders were seldom impressive on offense, but the goals and assists were scattered among a dozen players and opponents weren't able to key on anyone. Leading scorers were sophomore Kurt Kohler (Grosse Pointe Woods, Mich.), four goals and four assists; freshman Rob Hazel (Chesapeake City, Md.), six goals and one assist, and Dave Orris (Middleburg, Pa.), another freshman, five goals and two assists.

and lineman Bill Atkinson (Chatham, N.J.). Eickhoff and Atkinson were the co-captains.

The cross country team, which stumbled to a 1-11 record in 1972, assured itself of better things this season by beating Haverford and Lebanon Valley in the first meet. Coached by Bruce Wagenseller, head of the Physical Education Department and an ardent jogger himself, the team posted an 8-5 record, giving Susquehanna its eighth winning season in cross country during the past 10 years. Sophomore Jeff Yoder of Mt. Carmel, Pa. finished first for the Crusaders in most meets and the remainder of the team was composed mainly of freshmen.

Eleven freshmen lettered in football during a frustrating 2-7 season. The loss of numerous upperclassmen who dropped out of school or decided not to come out for football forced head coach Jim Hazlett to rely heavily on frosh. Hazlett noted that the 50 players who participated in a winter workout program last year had dwindled to 28 at the start of pre-season practice. The remaining 38 candidates who reported for the opening drills were first-year men.

yards and fullback Jim Camut (Johnstown, Pa.), another yearling, contributed an additional 333 yards. Sophomore Jeff Steltz (Wyomissing, Pa.), who took the starting assignment at split end away from two seniors, was the leading receiver with 26 catches for 340 yards.

Another standout was placekicker and defensive tackle Chuck Smeltz of Sunbury, who gained national recognition when his 53rd extra point without a miss broke an NCAA College Division record. Smeltz, who hasn't missed a PAT in his three years at Susquehanna, had stretched his string to 58 at the close of the season. In addition, he set what is thought to be a new S.U. record for field goals in one season with 10 and tied the record for the longest with a 47-yarder. His 10 three-pointers came in only 14 attempts.

The most disappointing aspect of the season was the failure of the defensive unit to perform consistently or to hold leads the Crusaders had in several games they lost. However, an inexperienced offensive line, considered the team's biggest weakness as the season opened, showed steady improvement, providing adequate blocking for the running backs and some excellent pass protection for the quarterbacks in the last few games.

Susquehanna has had only one winning season in basketball during the past decade, but the Crusaders were expecting bigger and better things this winter. Coach Barry Keadle's rebuilding program started paying off in the latter part of the 1972-73 season. His young team, which had lost nine of its first 12 games, suddenly jelled and won seven of the remaining 11. Included in the comeback were victories on the road over three opponents who had beaten the Crusaders earlier at home.

With almost everyone returning and another good group of freshmen providing additional depth, the outlook for this winter was quite promising. High-scoring guard Jim Baglin (Plainfield, N.J.), a senior, headed the list of returning lettermen. Baglin, who transferred to Susquehanna after completing the two-year program at Union College in New Jersey, averaged 18.1 points per game last winter and also was high in assists with 74.

Other returning starters were center Dave Long (Doylestown, Pa.), who averaged 11.5 points per game last year as a freshman; forward-guard Ralph Wolckenhauer (River Vale, N.J.), 10.5 points and 8.4 rebounds per game; playmaker Joe Prekopa (McAdoo, Pa.), and forward Duncan Blair (Brooklyn, N.Y.).

* * *

The Crusaders are more accustomed to winning in wrestling. S.U. hasn't had a losing season in this sport since it was added to the athletic program in 1966-67. Facing a stronger schedule last winter in a rebuilding campaign, the Crusaders won 7 and lost 5. They have more experience this year and hope to improve on that record.

Four Men Receive Honorary

Sandstedt and Bringman

Hatfield and Bremer

FOUR MEN were conferred with honorary degrees at Susquehanna on May 25 while 301 seniors were granted their bachelor's degrees. The Commencement exercises closed the University's 116th academic year.

U.S. Senator Mark O. Hatfield of Oregon, who delivered the Commencement address, was given the Doctor of Public Administration. A graduate of Willamette College and Stanford University, he formerly taught political science and was dean of students at Willamette. The well-known spokesman for peace and conservation served as a state legislator, state senator, Secretary of State and Governor of Oregon before going to Washington.

Three prominent clergymen received the Doctor of Divinity—the Rev. J. Stephen Bremer, senior pastor of Luther Memorial Church, Madison, Wis.; the Rev. Dale S. Bringman '48, pastor of Grace Lutheran Church, State College, Pa.; and the Rev. Daniel H. Sandstedt, director of field education for the Lutheran Theological Seminary at Gettysburg.

Dr. Bremer, a product of Wesleyan University and the Lutheran School of Theology at Chicago, was chaplain of Susquehanna, 1969-73, and previously had been senior representative for Great Britain and Ireland of the Lutheran World Federation. A leader in the field of liturgics, he preached the Baccalaureate sermon on the morning of Commencement.

Dr. Bringman, alumnus of Susquehanna and the Gettysburg seminary, has been pastor in the Penn State University community since 1957. In the Central Pennsylvania Synod, Lutheran Church in America, he has seen service as a member of the executive board and several important committees, and is a former dean of the Lewistown District.

Dr. Sandstedt holds degrees from Gustavus Adolphus College and Augustana Theological Seminary. A specialist in pastoral care and clinical pastoral education, he was director of chaplaincy at Augustana Hospital in Chicago for many years and is currently adviser on hospital chaplaincy to the American Hospital Association.

ON OUR COVER: Two of the Sheep sisters (Janet Klemm and Carlen Schmidt) cavort for the photographer with Mr. Grass Hopper (Morgan Evans) before a children's theatre performance of "Aesop's Fables." All three are members of the Class of 1977. A highly successful show, we tell you more about it on pages 14 and 15.

It hurts us at least as much as it does you, gentle reader, when our magazine comes out later than usual. We take seriously our obligation to appear every three months. This issue has been plagued with a number of problems which delayed putting it into final form for publishing—such as several postponements and then very-late cancellation of the annual feature from Editorial Projects for Education, the change from hot type to cold type which necessitated modifications to some of our production procedures, and the chaos these factors caused as time slipped by and we found ourselves smack in the middle of other priorities—like Alumni Weekend and Commencement. We appreciate your patience and trust that things will get back on schedule next time around.

The Way We Were:
ALUMNI DAY '74*

Springtime is a time for coming back to campus, and nearly 500 alumni and their guests came back this year over the May 3 weekend to see their former classmates, look at old photographs and yearbooks, catch up on the state of the University, and honor those selected to receive Alumni Awards. The 1974 award winners are pictured above: Richard C. Leib, Sunbury insurance man, community leader and Susquehanna Advisory Council member, Distinguished Citizenship Award; chemistry major Bruce W. Downs of North Caldwell, N.J. and history major Barbara P. Dalrymple of Rosemont, Pa., Senior Man and Woman Most Typifying the Ideals of Susquehanna; President Gustave W. Weber; Jack P. Shipe '40, retired toy manufacturer of Herndon, Pa., Alumni Award for Service; Dr. Ralph C. Geigle '35, superintendent of schools in Reading, Pa., Alumni Award for Achievement. The Citizenship Award, an illuminated plaque, is given annually to a non-alumnus. The other awards are bronze medals depicting Alma Mater as a Susquehanna Indian woman. Award presentations have been a highlight of alumni gatherings since 1956 when the first Achievement honors were given to the late Jerry D. Bogar x'99 and his son, the late Guy M. Bogar '21.

MINUTES OF ALUMNI ASSOCIATION MEETING

THE SUSQUEHANNA UNIVERSITY Alumni Association met in the Campus Center at Selinsgrove on Saturday, May 4, 1974 for the annual Alumni Weekend business session in connection with the Alumni Luncheon. There were 435 in attendance. The meeting was called to order by President Harry Butts '48 and the invocation was pronounced by the Rev. Dr. Edgar S. Brown, chaplain to the University.

Following the luncheon, Buss Carr '52, director of alumni relations, introduced May Queen Barbara Dalrymple of Rosemont, Pa., members of her court and their elected escorts who assisted Lou Santangelo '50 in presenting remembrances to emeriti alumni and those celebrating the 50th anniversary of their graduation. Other reunion classes recognized were 1929, 1934, 1939, 1944, 1949, 1954, and 1964. The class of 1959 had no members present to celebrate their reunion. The class of 1974 was received into the Alumni Association and its vice president, William D. Atkinson of Chatam, N.J., presented the class gift of $7000 to be used for a score board in the new field house. The gift was accepted by Dr. Weber, president of the University, with appropriate remarks.

The business session opened with a motion by Secretary Dorothy Turner '36 to approve the minutes of the last meeting as reproduced and distributed. She also announced the results of the mail vote. For Alumni Representative to the University Board of Directors there was a tie between Samuel D. Ross Jr. '54 and Raymond G. Hochstuhl '47, so both names will be submitted to the Board for action. The five Members-at-large elected to the alumni Executive Committee for terms expiring in 1977 are: Maria Wernikowski MacFarlan '62, Elwood M. McAllister '49, Virginia Carlson McKenzie '69, Neil R. Smith '63, James W. White '58. President Butts reported a treasury balance of $370.44. Lou Santangelo, Alumni Day chairman, announced the weekend schedule and expressed appreciation to the persons who were instrumental in making the festivities a success. Lester Heilman '52, chairman of the Club Activities Committee, announced that there were 14 area club meetings held this year, including two in Florida. There are several outings being planned for this summer and two clubs are in the process of reactivating. Doug Arthur '49, chairman of the University Fund, reported that our goal of $150,000 has not yet been reached but there is every reason to believe it will be by June 30. The telethons were expanded to more areas this year and will be further expanded in 1975. Buss Carr, reporting for the University Relations Committee, announced that the class of 1969 will hold its fifth reunion at Homecoming and that the Alumni Association will sponsor a party for the class of 1974 during graduation week. Harry Butts, reporting for the Nominating Committee, presented the slate of nominees to office for the coming year: George H. Bantley '41, president; William C. Davenport '53 and Robert Hackenberg '56, vice presidents; Signe S. Gates '71, secretary; Chester G. Rowe '52, treasurer. There were no further nominations from the floor. Nominations were closed and the secretary was instructed to cast a single ballot for the entire slate.

Awards Committee Chairman Donald E. Wissinger '50 then made these presentations for 1974: Distinguished Citizenship Award to Richard C. Leib of Sunbury; Senior Man and Woman Most Typifying the Ideals of Susquehanna to Bruce W. Downs, North Caldwell, N.J., and Barbara P. Dalrymple of Rosemont, Pa.; Achievement Medal to Dr. Ralph C. Geigle '35 of Reading, Pa.; Service Medal to Jack P. Shipe '40 of Herndon, Pa.

The luncheon meeting was adjourned with the singing of the Alma Mater.

Respectfully submitted,
DOROTHY TURNER '36, Secretary

The weekend activities commenced Friday afternoon with a golf tournament and included such events as a get-together at the home of Simon '30 and Kathryn Jarrett Rhoads x'34, class reunion meetings, a dinner dance, and a Chapel service with the Rev. Edwin M. Clapper '34 preaching. At Saturday's Awards Luncheon (above) President Weber was presented with the Senior Class gift of $7000 for a scoreboard to be placed in the new gym, by Bill Atkinson, vice president of the class. Fifty-year graduates were recognized with red roses and framed woodcuts of the Roger M. Blough Learning Center (upper right, May Queen Barb Dalrymple with Grace Barnett Bastian '24 and her husband Fred). Entertaining at the piano during the luncheon was Rudy Gelnett '37. Seated at the head table were Lou Santangelo, Voylet Dietz Carr, Don Wissinger, Mrs. Edgar Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Leib, Dr. and Mrs. Ralph Geigle, President Weber, Harry Butts, Mrs. Jack Shipe and Jack, Mrs. Weber, Chaplain Brown, Flora Barnhart Wissinger, Virginia Doss Butts, and Buss Carr.

Susquehanna students have traditionally been involved in Spring Weekend too, and 1974 was no exception. Friday evening saw the coronation of May Queen Barbara Dalrymple of Rosemont, Pa., the second May Queen to be also winner of the Alumni Award (the first was Alyce Zimmer in 1973). She was escorted by King (a first) Richard DiSanti of Cheswick, Pa., a geology major. The May Court (below) consisted of, front: Sara Hess, Summit, N.J.; Karen Newson, Lafayette Hill, Pa.; Jeanne Kauffman, Lewistown, Pa.; Queen Barbara; 1973 Queen Alyce Zimmer; Marilyn Blend, Hempstead, N.Y.; Susan Lang, West Caldwell, N.J.; Zona Weimer, Millerstown, Pa. Back: Steven Kramm, Belleville, Pa.; Patrick Petre, Carlisle, Pa.; James Baglin, Plainfield, N.J.; King Richard; Miss Zimmer's escort; Douglas Brinkman, Glen Cove, N.Y.; William Atkinson, Chatham, N.J. Missing from the photo is Darryl Willis, Long Branch, N.J. There were three performances each of "Cyrano de Bergerac" in Chapel Auditorium and an Opera Workshop in Benjamin Apple Theatre. And on Saturday morning student crews competed in the annual Raft Race on the Susquehanna River—this year won by Kappa Delta and Lambda Chi Alpha.

So You Want To Be A Manager

MANAGEMENT

IN LOOKING at your program for this week I see that you have already received information on a number of professions. I would like to take a little time this evening to discuss with you all of these previous ideas under the broad umbrella of Management.

We will look at management in several parts—a broad overview of management as it is viewed in business and industry, the current outlook for job opportunities through the remainder of the '70s, the preparation that is needed to get into management, starting salaries—that's kind of important—and promotional opportunities.

In another year (or two), if you don't go on to graduate school, you're going to be looking for a job. For many of you this will be the first step in your career path. All right, what have you done to prepare yourself and how are you going to go about looking? Are you anticipating that an employment recruiter will interview you on campus? Will you be looking in the classified newspaper ads? Are you going to go to an employment agency? Or, might you take a State or Federal civil service test for a government position? How do you go about writing a resumé? How do you present yourself favorably to a potential employer? What skills do you have to offer? These are some of the things you should be thinking about and getting answers to between now and the time you graduate.

Motivation for Management Careers

According to a research report in the December 1973 issue of Harvard Business Review by John Miner, research professor of management at Georgia State University, fewer and fewer among the younger generation exhibit the kinds of motivation needed for careers in management as we know it today. He predicts major shortages of executive talent in the years to come.

He goes on to say that among students, there has been a notable shift away from the types of motivation characterizing those who typically seek managerial careers in large corporations and who succeed in those careers. This implies that an increasingly high proportion of individuals who are hired for management positions will perform poorly in them unless some adjustments are made—either within corporations or in the groups of new personnel they hire, or both.

Samuel D. Ross '54 is vice president for administrative services of Pennsylvania Blue Shield in Harrisburg. This article is the text of an address he delivered at a three-half-day Career Information Conference staged in April by Susquehanna's Placement Office and attended by some 250 undergraduates and advisers. At a time when students and younger alumni—as well as others—are once again examining career options with great care and interest, Sam's remarks about management seem relevant to all. Other alumni who made presentations at the conference include: The Rev. Gilbert C. Askew '61 of Allentown, Pa.; The Rev. W. Stevens Shipman '69 of Light Street, Pa.; Harry W. Butts '48, Philadelphia regional manager for the Burroughs Corp.; Joseph R. Williard '48, public relations director for Nationwide Insurance Co.; Marsha Lehman '74, applications analyst for the Eastman Kodak Co. Also appearing on the program was Robert C. Goetze, executive vice president of Albert F. Goetze Inc. and a member of Susquehanna's Board of Directors. Another, similar conference is scheduled for October 28, 29.

Professor Miner arrived at certain attitudes and motives that are particularly likely to contribute to success in a given managerial position at any level and to rapid promotion up the managerial ladder. These attitudes are:

1. A favorable attitude toward authority—Managers are expected to behave in ways that do not provoke negative reactions from their superiors.
2. A desire to compete—Insofar as peers are concerned, there must be a strong competitive element built into managerial work; a manager must compete for the available rewards, both for himself and for his group.
3. Assertive motivation—The manager must be able to take charge, to make decisions, and to take such disciplinary action as may be necessary to protect the other members of his group.
4. A desire to exercise power—A manager must exercise power over his subordinates and direct their behavior consistent with organizational objectives. He must tell others what to do when this becomes necessary, and enforce his words through positive and negative sanctions.
5. A desire for a distinct position or identity—The managerial job tends to require a person to behave differently from the ways his subordinates behave toward each other. He must be willing to take the center of the stage and assume a position of high visibility.
6. A sense of responsibility—The managerial job requires getting the work out and staying on top of routine demands.

Management Defined

Now I would like to give you a simplified definition of management. Classically, management has been defined as "getting things done through other people." James Hayes, formerly dean of the College of Business Administration at Duquesne University and now president of the American Management Association, agrees with the above definition of management, but takes it one step further. He says that management is getting things done through other people with a high degree of morale and employee satisfaction. In today's business world it is not enough to provide a good product which satisfies the customer—it must also give satisfaction to the producer.

Like many young men and women today, I presume, you're idealists. You're concerned about mounting human problems that previous generations—it seems—have never done very much about. You want to serve; you want the profession or occupation you choose to make a real contribution toward building a better world. Maybe you're thinking vaguely of medicine, agriculture, social work, or some kind of teaching.

But have you ever thought of a career in management? You probably connect the word management with the business world. And that's not for you—all those clichés about "the profit motive," "the organization man," "planned obsolescence," "the rat race"—they bother you. They needn't—but that's another story. What's important is that management is essential to every kind of human activity.

This means, of course, that you can end up being a manager no matter what your chosen career or profession may be. Almost inevitably a person moves into management as he or she climbs the professional ladder. For example, after practicing medicine for some years, the young internist is selected to run the community hospital—he is now primarily a manager instead of a doctor. The agriculture expert becomes a manager when he heads a team to increase food production in a depressed country, or the social worker who heads up a big-city neighborhood house, or the teacher who becomes principal of the high school. They all become managers.

At the turn of the century there were few professions and a few colleges. At that time the colleges were busy turning out qualified doctors, lawyers, and preachers. Nobody else—people thought—needed a college education. Least of all women—who, except for a few eccentric types, were expected to be wives and mothers.

Farmers' sons stayed on the land. The sons and nephews of prosperous merchants found jobs in the family business. Less fortunate boys of 12 or 13 or 14 quit school to go to work in the mill or factory. If they were lucky or very ambitious, they might eventually work up to supervising some of the younger workers.

In the past 50 years the outlook has changed drastically. More and more young people are going to college. About 800,000 seniors are entering the labor market in 1974. Organizations everywhere, both industry and government, are looking for trained workers: writers, chemists, engineers, economists, psychologists, mathematicians, and managers. Management, too, has become a profession. Experience in one's chosen field is important, but it cannot in itself prepare a person to manage that job.

Tomorrow's leaders will be concerned with the environmental and social impact of their goals and decisions. They will need to cope with more uncertainties and make the best possible decisions on the basis of available expertise, data, and sometimes their own hunches. Because their decisions and activities will take place in an atmosphere of accelerating change, changes that seriously affect business and public life, they will need to be sharper in discerning their own strengths and weaknesses, as well as those of others.

Management style will be more and more participative. It will involve consultations among and with those doing the work at all levels within the organization as a means of arriving at better decisions on activities that affect all.

Virtually all jobs will tend to be more complex and will have increased responsibility. Accountability and decision making will be delegated downward, with the management layer becoming thinner and some levels of management even being eliminated.

The manager of the future will be required to be highly flexible. The rate of technological change in our nation means most men and women will have to change careers at least five times in their working lives, and change jobs much more often than that. This means greater opportunities for most people, and they should come as a welcome challenge rather than a threat.

Skills are Needed

Now let's look at some of the more specific skills that the manager of the future will need. "Challenging," "demanding," "dynamic," "strenuous" are a few of the adjectives being used by managers to describe their jobs. Being an effective manager has never been easy and it's getting more difficult every day.

Do you work well with others, or are you better off doing the job alone? A manager cannot be so withdrawn that he or she fails to communicate with people. The manager cannot feel so superior that he or she has no faith in associates or so impatient that he or she has trouble adjusting to what is considered their level.

The manager must have intellectual curiosity. The manager must be alert to the knowledge explosion that's going on around us. The manager must be able to soak up facts and figures so that he or she can turn almost any form of information to good advantage.

The manager needs to understand modern information-gathering and decision-making techniques. The manager must understand the scientific approach to problem-solving—defining the problem, determining the facts, weighing the alternatives, and then making the best possible choice.

The manager no longer sees people as just another commodity to be bought and used. The manager no longer assumes that people are lazy, that they have to be coerced into working, that they shun responsibility and are interested only in security. The manager recognizes that people like and want to work, that neither money nor fear of punishment is the powerful motivator it used to be, and that the average person not only accepts but wants responsibility. The manager knows that human resources are his or her most valuable asset.

A manager must be a positive person who sees clearly what has to be done. A manager must inspire confidence and enthusiasm. Often, with no great personal magnetism or brilliance, the manager can induce his or her followers to accomplish more than they thought possible.

Managers, like organizations, come in assorted sizes and styles. There is no uniform pattern, no one combination of qualities. Whoever aspires to leadership must know his or her strengths and weaknesses, make full use of the strengths and minimize the weaknesses, develop him or herself by every available means. The process never ends, for successive levels demand new and often quite different skills. What may be adequate for the plant foreman or the office supervisor may not qualify that person for the job of department head or vice president.

Theoretically, it's still possible to start as mail clerk and end up as Chairman of the Board. However, the odds against this type of progression are very high. In seeking out management talent, organizations are looking for the college graduate. To get into a management position, what kind of college degree is best? There is no easy answer here. Some companies prefer the liberal-arts type, while others prefer the business school graduate. From my own biased viewpoint, I think the ideal background is a four-year liberal arts course complete with economics, history, sociology, government, and psychology. It would be ideal if this person could then go on for one more year for some graduate work at one of the business schools.

At the very minimum, the manager's preparation for his or her career should provide several basic tools.

- * First, the ability to express oneself effectively in spoken and written English
- * Second, the ability to listen and observe
- * Third, the ability to read great quantities of material, extract the important from the unimportant and put it to work usefully
- * Finally, the manager's education must equip him or her to accept change and meet it successfully. The world is changing; the organization and job are changing; the manager must keep on growing and encourage others to grow. The manager can't assume that once the diploma is received he or she can leave textbooks and classrooms behind.

Management Opportunities

What opportunities are there in business, industry, and government for the college graduate through the remainder of the '70s? According to a recent survey by U.S. News and World Report and the Endicott Survey at Northwestern University, the decline in job opportunities in the early 1970s has reached a plateau and the picture is quite healthy for the remainder of the decade. There will be many more opportunities in all fields of endeavor except in elementary and secondary teaching positions—these are on the decline. If you prefer to pursue advanced degrees, there are great opportunities in the science field. The opportunities for women and the minority groups are greater than ever before and appear to be increasing in the coming years. As you probably know, in the past there has been a considerable gap in the salaries paid to men and women doing the same jobs. This is rapidly being remedied. With some exceptions, the college woman today can expect to enter the labor force at the same salary being offered her male counterpart.

Now let's examine some salary figures that you might expect on an entry level job, perhaps as a management trainee. In the Harrisburg area, for instance, the going rate is somewhere between $9000 and $9300. This includes our information on business and industry and State government positions. Of course, there are fringe benefits on top of the salary and these do vary from one organization to another. If you have a specialized degree in the sciences or data processing, you can expect to start perhaps $1000 or $3000 higher.

What about the promotional opportunities for the management trainee. In most business there are "line" and "staff" management. The line managers are responsible for actually making the product or providing the service. The staff managers have specialized knowledge and act in an advisory or support capacity to the line people.

Let's look at some of these positions. In production, the line management runs something like this: foreman or supervisor, department head, plant manager, general manager, vice president, president. Then, in the staff management capacity there are planning and scheduling, building and equipment maintenance, quality control, etc.

In marketing, the line begins with salesman and leads up through the sales supervisor, district sales manager, regional sales manager, and general manager to the vice president and president. Marketing also has its staff activities in sales forecasting, sales training, marketing research, advertising and promotion, and customer service.

There are many staff opportunities in the personnel function with its recruiters, employment interviewers, contract negotiators, training specialists, wage and salary administrators and employee benefits specialists—all of these positions handling details of the employer/employee relationships.

Then, too, there is data processing which in a few years has penetrated every corner of the organization with its computer operators, programmers, and systems analysts. The list is endless—whatever the organization.

Why are people drawn into the management area and why, once they're caught up in the hectic atmosphere of modern organizational life, do they throw themselves into it with fervor?

Part of the explanation surely lies in being "where the action is," and in a position to influence it. This never-ending challenge is what executives mean when they try to explain the excitement of their jobs. It is a shared excitement in which people work together regardless of position, toward their various goals, always willing, often with enthusiasm.

"Politics" and Advancement

Now let's look at another aspect of the business organization which is rarely discussed but is always present regardless of where you go to work. I am now speaking of the political environment. You may be very intelligent and a technical whiz in your particular job. However, if you do not understand the politics of your company or organization, you are not going to make a lot of progress.

Maybe you have already read this book. If not, I recommend it to you before graduation. This is Bravely, Bravely in Business by Richard R. Conarroe. Here are a few of his rules for being successful in business. First, Conarroe says, you must learn that it is not so much what you know as who you know. Then there are some additional rules that he suggests you might follow:

- * Rule 1 advises you to stay in close touch with people who can help you.
- * Rule 2 points out that situations can change in an instant—so watch for trends. Better still, understand what's going on and become the trend-setter yourself.
- * Rule 3 says that you must always remember you are a salesman. The expensive merchandise you're selling is yourself, with your manner, your attitude, and the way you speak. If you feel enthusiasm it will show up in your phone calls, your letters, your reports, and your work.
- * Rule 4 advises you to consider the future significance of everything you say and do. With that in mind, be nice to everybody—you never know who your boss is going to be tomorrow.
- * Rule 5 tells you to watch your relationships with the higher-ups. Some people above you in your organization may be less competent than you. They can be dangerous. They can feel resentful of your ability and will seek to undermine you at every opportunity. The only way to handle them is to make them look good—even at your own expense.

Conarroe rephrases the old Know Thyself adage. He says to find out what you can do better than anyone else, then go ahead and do it. To win your boss's respect, you must offer him honesty and truth. Since truth is in short supply, it will help you to rise to the top. Develop the art of risk taking. It's an ability that will make you different from most others in your field. Whatever your direction, go ahead with confidence. Let people feel you're winning even when you seem to be losing. Keep smiling. Everyone likes a good loser and wants to be near a winner. Make enemies if you have to, but keep them to a minimum. The word revenge should not be in your vocabulary. It can cause your downfall.

These are the political rules you must remember, according to John Conarroe.

The true "organization man" or "organization woman" always responds instinctively to the organization's requirements and the opportunities it provides. It is his or her natural environment. Far from being crushed by it, the organization person makes an increasing impact upon it. The higher in the organization one climbs, the greater he or she is able to shape it in accordance with the concepts of service, and its purpose as he or she sees it.

Remember, the end result will depend not on ambition alone. It will depend on the individual's quality as a person, on the ability to turn opportunity to advantage, and most of all on one's breadth of vision and understanding.

There are no guarantees, but the manager accepts that—that's the way the real manager wants it.

Aesop's Fables

LATE IN MARCH a modest news release appeared from Susquehanna announcing that the Department of Communication and Theatre Arts had "scheduled two Saturday presentations of 'Aesop's Fables' for the special entertainment of children under its Theatre for Young People program." The musical version of "Fables," which means fractured fables and is pronounced "fallible," was performed in tiny Benjamin Apple Theatre with its limited seating capacity. Groups which might like to see the show were asked to request separate performances, either on campus or at their own schools or churches. Ron Sydow, instructor in theatre arts and director of the production, was hopeful that he would receive one or two such requests so that more kids could be reached and his cast could have extra performing opportunities.

Before the ink was dry, however, requests began pouring in and it soon became impossible to comply with all demands. The rock musical played to day care and nursery groups, enrichment classes of local Intermediate Units, an elementary school, a church group and a district church group, and closed its season at the Lewisburg Art Festival on May 11. What had begun as an experiment "seeking the response of the community for live theatre for young people" was eventually seen by some 2000 persons in nine ideal, small-audience performances.

"Fables," written by Ed Graczyk with music by Shirley Hansen, is a re-telling of some of Aesop's most popular tales, acted and sung by versatile student performers playing a variety of very funny roles. The characters have such names as Thadius T. Tortoise, Clarissa Crow, Roxanne Rabbit, Nurse Stork, Mr. Grass Hopper, and Wilfred M. Wolf—who protests Aesop's unfair treatment of wolves in the original fables and insists on the chance to prove to the audience through the fables his true virtuous and innocent nature.

by D. EDGAR HUTCHISON

D. Edgar Hutchison '34 joined the Susquehanna University staff as a part-time associate in development in January after completing an active and productive career with the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company. During his last five years with Firestone, he was sales manager for the Harrisburg District. Always one to take an active and vocal interest in Susquehanna, Ted and his wife, the former Aberdeen Phillips '34, were given the Alumni Award for Service on Alumni Day in 1972. Residing at 763 Vista Dr., Camp Hill, Pa. 17011, he now spends part of his time visiting alumni and friends of the University and encouraging them to consider taking an active interest in Susquehanna and its future. This brief article will acquaint the reader with Ted and outline some of his thoughts about higher education and, more particularly, about Susquehanna University. Mr. Hutchison is available to discuss Susquehanna with alumni at any time and can provide information about Deferred Giving, a vital topic and a vital ingredient in the University's future. He may be reached at home or through the Development Office, Susquehanna University, Selinsgrove, Pa. 17870.

The University and the Alumnus:

IT CAN BE A MUTUALLY BENEFICIAL RELATIONSHIP

ON MORE than one occasion in recent years I suspect that my enthusiasm for the University has become obsessive, and my wife has been heard to comment, "For heaven's sake, Ted, quit talking about Susquehanna! People get tired of hearing about it all the time." Perhaps so, but people with sales experience recognize the need to be enthusiastic about something in which they believe. Higher education in general and Susquehanna in particular are, for me, easy to promote. As the Class of 1934 celebrates its 40th reunion, the memories of years past tend to fade but the meaning of the University in our lives begins to take an even sharper image. My concern is not simply what Susquehanna did for me, my wife or my son but, more importantly, what Susquehanna can do for future generations of students.

My purpose in spending time with the University at this point in my life is to do what I can to ensure that the Susquehanna type of education remains viable and within the reach of students from all socio-economic backgrounds. Furthermore, there is, it seems to me, an obligation for those of us who have received the benefits instilled by the presence in our lives of Sheldon, Houtz, Woodruff, Fisher, Gilbert, Galt, Russ, Stagg and countless others to consider the ways and means available to us to make this type of education and exposure permanent at Susquehanna. Over the years the faces and names of faculty and staff change, but the type of education engendered at Susquehanna by its faculty remains as important today as it did 20, 30, or 40 years ago.

Much is written today about the pressures exerted on colleges and universities. Survival itself is a concern of some. This need not be a problem if alumni and friends will consider the matter one of personal concern and attempt to assist Susquehanna in planning for the future.

To help meet this challenge, the University has activated a deferred giving program in an attempt to provide its alumni and friends with information about the various means of assuring the University's future. This need not be a One Way Street, since providing for Susquehanna by bequest or trust can be mutually beneficial to both institution and alumnus. Tax considerations are important, and it is often shown that a bequest or other form of charitable gift can actually be economical and even reduce the donor's estate tax burden.

The S.U. Deferred Giving Program is informative and seeks to provide guidance. In no way does the University consider itself qualified to serve as legal counsel. In fact, our sole purpose is to stimulate thought and bring alumni to the point of talking this matter over with legal or financial counsel.

It is estimated that as much as 90 percent of a college's endowment funds are derived from deferred gifts. Such funds are important in that they provide annual income for increased faculty salaries and scholarship aid. In these days of rapid inflation, well paid faculty are the lifeblood of an institution trying to remain competitive, while scholarship aid assures the continued availability of Susquehanna to students from all economic backgrounds. With proper planning through the use of bequests and trusts, alumni and friends will be surprised how many can help the University in this regard and, at the same time, guarantee the financial security of beneficiaries.

To stress the importance of the deferred gift, it will be of interest to note that this year alone the University will receive over $150,000 in bequests from alumni and friends. Over the past decade the University has received well over $1 million from alumni and friends through deferred gifts. These testamentary gifts have been given for specified purposes—such as scholarships—or as unrestricted endowment funds. Like most church-related institutions, Susquehanna has a meager endowment of about $2 million. Over the next decade this sum must increase at least fivefold to generate the income needed to ensure a continued balanced budget that will provide for expanded educational opportunities. Specifically, much of the future of the University rests with alumni in our willingness to find the means to help strengthen its academic and financial resources. This was true of alumni in the days when we were students and it is particularly applicable today.

We ask alumni to investigate the possibility of a deferred gift to Susquehanna. I will be happy to talk with you about this matter and provide information for your review. There is no obligation. The size of bequests received in recent years has varied from $1000 to $250,000. Gifts of all sizes are equally important in proportion to the ability of the alumnus to provide for Susquehanna while, at the same time, providing for family and other beneficiaries.

I hope that you will give this matter some thought. Ask for information; we will be happy to answer your questions. The most important thing is that all alumni consider the need for a will and for formulating an estate plan. It is often surprising how proper planning will better accommodate the needs of loved ones and, in many cases, provide an opportunity to help assure the continued good work of your favorite charitable organizations.

This recent aerial photo reveals the dramatic increase in the size of the Susquehanna University library, now the Roger M. Blough Learning Center. The left front portion (distinguishable by a slight difference in roof color) was built in 1928, the remainder of the front in 1958, and the extension to the rear was completed last winter. Now occupying some 47,000 square feet, the building also includes areas for environmental studies, educational media, music listening components, and a television studio.

'49 Class Boosts Fund

An idea for your class?

Jim Peters '49, chairman of the 25th reunion class, checked with the Alumni Office to see how the 129 active members of his class were responding to the University Fund this year. He then wrote special notes to those who had not yet contributed, suggesting $25—one dollar for each year since graduation—as a starting amount.

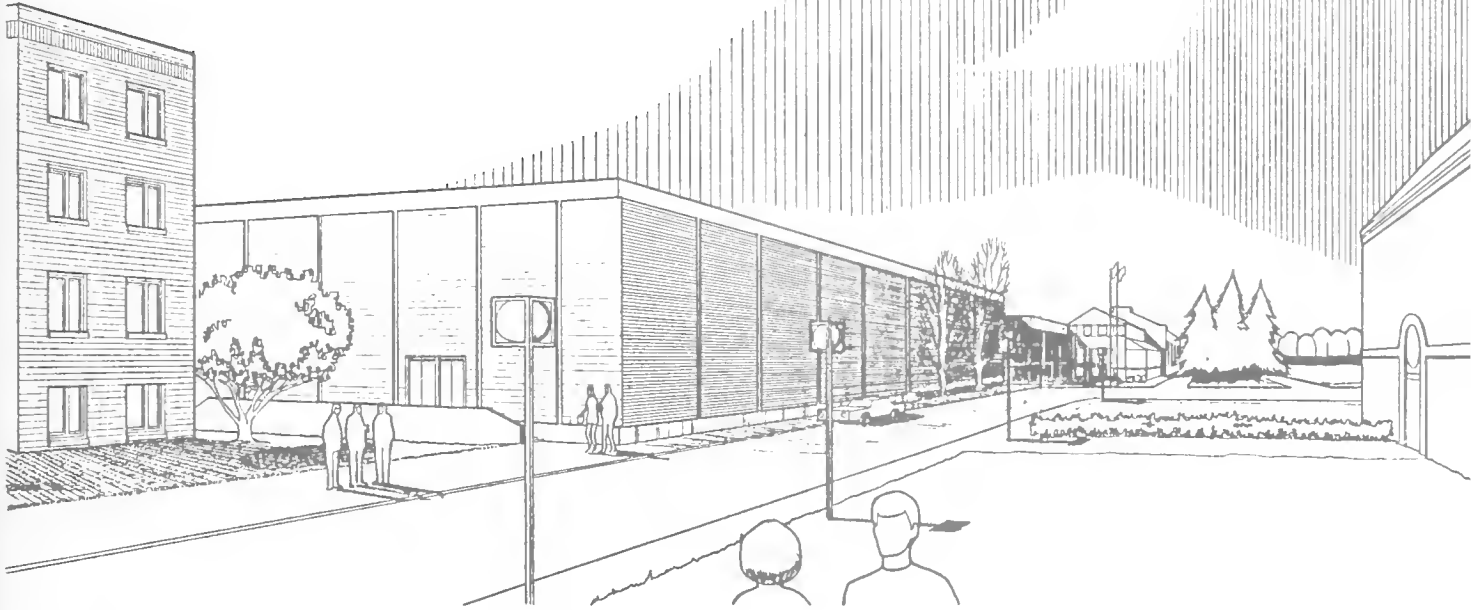

Result: he helped increase the class participation from 18 to 43 givers, a healthy 33 percent of potential. As of May 14, the Class of 1949 had produced $2770 for the Fund for an average of close to $65.

Jim is a teacher-coach at Kutztown State College.

Luncheon in Baltimore

Alumni and friends of Susquehanna may join those of all 18 universities, colleges and junior colleges affiliated with the Lutheran Church in America at a luncheon event being held at noon on Tuesday, July 9, at the Lord Baltimore Hotel in Baltimore during the biennial LCA convention.

Board OKs Gym

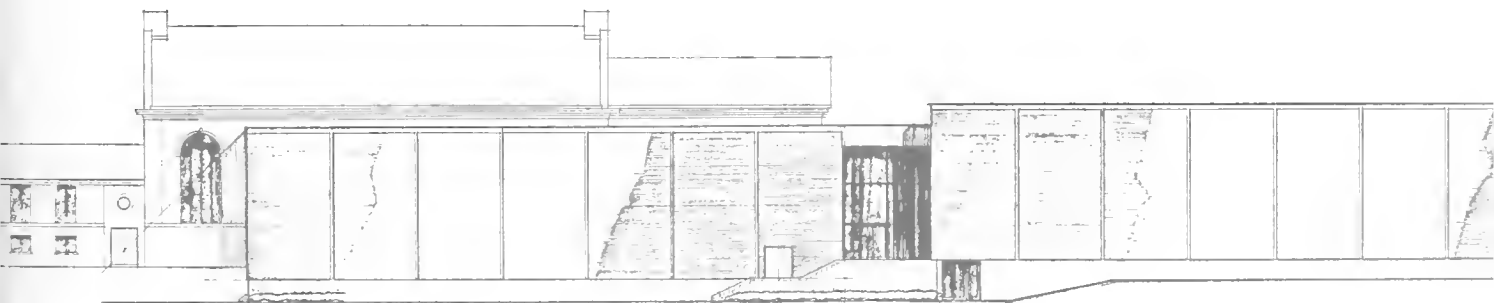

Campbell, Rea, Hayes & Large, architects of Altoona, Pa., have prepared this perspective of Susquehanna's Alumni Gym addition. Hassinger Hall is at left. Below is an east elevation, which would be the view from University Field.

THE SUSQUEHANNA UNIVERSITY Board of Directors at its spring meeting on May 6 approved a $2.5 million proposal for additions and renovations to Alumni Gymnasium, but may decide to have the construction done in two stages.

The total building project would add, to the east and north of the present structure, a new intercollegiate basketball court with seating for 2000 spectators, an Olympic-size swimming pool with seating capacity of 450, squash courts, offices, lobby, and team and shower rooms. The older building—which replaced a still-older gymnasium destroyed by fire in 1934—would be renovated to create several classrooms, new locker rooms and basketball floor, a room for gymnastics, and a relocated wrestling room.

The final plans and specifications will be reviewed by the Board in October and, in light of a report on priorities and financing, the directors will decide whether to build all at once or divide the work into two phases. While recognizing the need for the new facility and aware that several generations of students and alumni have been eager to proceed for some years, the Board is determined that the timing of construction should be based on a total evaluation of other needs and financial obligations.

The University has never had a swimming pool and has played varsity basketball games at Selinsgrove High School for the past 15 years because there is virtually no seating space in the present gym.

SU Sports

by PETE SILVESTRI

Peter B. Silvestri is SU's new director of public information. A graduate of Amherst and Trinity and a former social studies teacher, he was most recently Tolland County bureau chief for The Hartford (Ct.) Times.

ALTHOUGH the Lanthorn staff did not have Susquehanna's intercollegiate sports program in mind when it selected "beginnings" as the theme for the 1974 yearbook, that theme can be applied to Crusader athletics during the past year.

With the exception of coach Neil Potter's soccer team which enjoyed its best season ever, 1973-74 sports squads did not make many marks in the Susquehanna record book. But all rosters were dominated by underclassmen and, hopefully, future successes will prove that what athletic director Jim Hazlett termed an "average" year record-wise was only the start of better things to come.

Overall, Crusader teams won 48 percent of their contests during the year. The spring sports groups were slightly below that pace with a success rating of 44 percent.

The spring saw only the golf team, coached by alumni director Buss Carr, achieve a winning season. Golf (8-4), baseball (9-14), track (4-5), men's tennis (5-7) and women's tennis (2-5) combined for a 28-35 spring. But there were only eight seniors involved in the entire spring sports program, and first-year men and women quickly became prominent performers at the "beginning" of their Susquehanna athletic careers.

Perhaps the most impressive performance by a newcomer was the one turned in by Ginny Davis of Warminster, Pa., who took over the number-one singles spot on coach Ann Cooper's women's tennis team in her first year on campus, won three of her seven matches, and might have won two more had she not been ill late in the campaign. Another freshman, Jill Simpson of Washington, Pa., also had a 3-4 individual record, the squad's best. Women's tennis loses one senior, Cheryl Bishop of Jamesville, N.Y.

The golfers owed their success to team balance and consistency. Lacking any real par-breakers, the Susquehanna linksmen topped their opposition with a steady team performance that usually found five Crusaders right around the 80 mark.

In the MAC Tournament, the golfers bettered the previous tourney team-score record, but so did five other schools, and Susquehanna finished tied for fifth in the 19-team field. In the individual ranking, sophomore Steve Farrell of Bloomfield, Ct. finished tied for sixth with a 36-hole total of 151, five strokes behind the leader.

Graduation claims only one golfer, Ivan Samuels of South Orange, N.J., who had the best season average with 79.6. A freshman, Kevin Flanagan of Hamden, Ct., finished consistently in the top five for the Crusaders, as did juniors Bob Carr of Short Hills, N.J.; Bruce Dansbury of Yardley, Pa.; and Doug Holcombe of Somerville, N.J.

The performance by the Crusader baseball team was probably the most disappointing aspect of spring sports because this squad, more than any other, could have done better. Throughout the season the Crusader nine got its share of hits and some strong pitching, but errors and poor base-running were costly.

Especially exasperating to coach Hazlett were the twin losses to Bucknell in the season finale. The Bisons came into the date with only three wins and Susquehanna had had more success against all their common opponents. But, as Hazlett commented afterwards, "anything you can do wrong in baseball we did," including two balks with men on third base by the same pitcher in the same inning.

At the spring sports banquet special baseball awards were presented to senior pitcher-outfielder Doug Brinkman of Glen Cove, N.Y., best pitcher and highest offensive rating; junior catcher Joe Prekopa of McAdoo, Pa., best batting average (.364) and most improved; and freshman second baseman Brad Moore of Old Saybrook, Ct., best rookie. In his first season Moore was not only the top rookie, but was among the most dependable players on the team. He took over the starting job at second base early in the season, batted .305, and led the team in doubles with four.

The baseball team suffers the most from graduation of the spring aggregations. Departing are Brinkman, Rich DiSanti of Cheswick, Pa., who Hazlett considers one of the best defensive first basemen he has ever seen on a college diamond, infielder Phil Popovec of Lutherville, Md., and outfielders John McCrudden of Douglassville, Pa. and Dean Madison of Spring Grove, Pa.

The track team, with no seniors and only four juniors on the roster of 25, did better than had been expected by interim coaches Charlie Kunes and Bruce Wagenseller, who admit they are not track experts and who hope their track coaching careers ended in 1974, the same year they began.

Special track awards went to junior hurdler and co-captain Bob Rattleman of Pittsburgh, most inspirational; sophomore distance runner Jeff Yoder of Mt. Carmel, Pa., most points; junior javelin thrower Glenn Levensgood of Gilbertsville, Pa., most improved; and freshman middle distance runner Bruce Koenecke of Westfield, N.J., best rookie.

New school records were set during the season by Yoder in the mile (4:24.1) and Levensgood in the javelin (224' 8"). Yoder took a fifth place in the mile in the MAC Tournament, and Levensgood a second in the javelin with sophomore teammate Chuck Yoder of Shamokin, Pa. taking third in the same event. Sophomore Craig Schaeffer of Westminster, Md. won third place in the MAC high jump and the Crusaders finished tied for eighth place among 17 teams.

The tennis season also marks the beginning and the end of a coaching career. Music instructor Vic Rislow took over the coaching duties, but finds that his other commitments will not allow him to do so next year. The new tennis coach will find only one senior gone from the 1974 group—number-one singles man Bill McCard of Jenkintown, Pa. Top performers this year were junior Bob Danielson of Chatham, N.J. and sophomore Larry Hill of Brick Town, N.J., who had the best individual marks on the squad both in singles and as a doubles team. Also earning points were junior John Bird of Bloomsburg, Pa. (football quarterback come fall) and freshman Bob Wentz of Hadden Heights, N.J.

Bill Atkinson, senior soccer co-captain from Chatham, N.J., received the Blair Heaton Memorial Award at the spring sports banquet. Atkinson had been an all-star goalie in high school, but switched positions for coach Potter and earned three letters as a halfback and inside lineman. Vice president of the senior class, he majored in business and plans a career in banking.

Testing the Environment

CF Walker Lake in western Snyder County is the site this summer of a research project of Susquehanna's Federally-funded Institute For Environmental Studies, which is examining the physical, chemical and biological characteristics of the area. The field team, upper left, includes Steve Platt '75 of Haddonfield, N.J., Institute director Dr. Frank W. Fletcher, and Scott Wissinger '76 of Hollidaysburg, Pa. They are shown collecting various samples of water and marine life and making initial tests aboard their floating laboratory. Back at home base in the University's Science Hall, more extensive analysis is conducted by Bruce Downs '74 of North Caldwell, N.J. and Debra Maurer '75 of Ashland, Pa.

ON OUR COVER This summer's cover illustration appears at first glance to be just another three happy fishermen enjoying the warm weather. Not so. The subjects are carrying out some serious work for Susquehanna's Institute For Environmental Studies and additional photo coverage is found on the opposite page. The boat, by the way, is the latest addition to the Susquehanna "fleet." The University also owns a number of canoes which are used in the physical education program.

Inside, we present two timely articles—one concerning an urban studies program recently established in Baltimore, and the other a glimpse of the Sinai Peninsula. Our next big issue, to appear in October, will feature the annual President's Report for 1973-74. Don't miss it.

EXPERIENTIAL LEARNING

IN BALTIMORE

by PETER SILVESTRI

THIS PAST SPRING six Susquehanna students from suburban New Jersey and rural outposts like Upper Black Eddy, Pa. spent 10 weeks living, working and studying urban affairs in Baltimore, the seventh largest city in the United States with a population of about 900,000.

For someone accustomed to life in an inner city it would have been educational. For students unfamiliar with the complexities of urban life it was a revelation that the six agreed was the most valuable part of their college experience.

The six students were the first to take part in the new program, inaugurated last year under the label Baltimore Urban Term. In its first year the program was deemed a great success by all involved—students, administration, faculty and the cooperating staff of the Southwest Tutorial and Enrichment Program (STEP) of Baltimore, an interdenominational social service group which arranged student housing and internships and led the seminars in the city.

The Baltimore Urban Term is one of several off-campus "experiential learning" opportunities offered at Susquehanna. Last year 10 percent of the student body was involved in one of these programs, which include internships with area firms in accounting, business administration and computer science, psychology and sociology practicums at the Selinsgrove State School, and student teaching in area schools. A unique rural studies internship program in cooperation with several other institutions in the region is in the planning stages and scheduled to begin next summer.

Susquehanna is committed to the role of experiential learning in the curriculum for two basic reasons. There is a realization that complex social, educational or business problems are often best studied firsthand from within, and that methods of dealing with them are best learned by doing. In addition there is the aspect of vocational preparation. A student with definite career goals can get valuable training through an internship, while one who is undecided on a future vocation can get a taste of the working world that may help him choose.

To ensure, however, that these programs are not merely "escapes" from the classroom, a solid link with theoretical and academic learning is provided. This is particularly true of the Baltimore Urban Term, which Registrar John Moore views as a "prototype" for experiential learning programs at the University. The students are involved in course work in related academic fields before, during and after the internship.

During the first term of the University's 3-3 calendar students have an opportunity to meet members of the Baltimore Urban faculty, including the staff of STEP who visit the campus, to discuss the course and internships. Interested students also have an opportunity to visit Baltimore before deciding whether to apply for the program.

During Term II students accepted into the program, mostly juniors, must take a seminar course, led by Assistant Professor of Religion Boyd Gibson, which offers an interdisciplinary study of urban affairs in general and Baltimore and its Southwest section in particular. The students are expected at this time to select an internship assignment and a related research topic for the in-Baltimore phase of the program.

The students spend all of Term III in Baltimore, receiving two course credits for their internship and one course credit for the seminar sessions, with grades given by the STEP staff. The internships involve between 20 and 30 hours of work per week. The seminar meets twice a week and offers visiting speakers from public and private social service agencies in Baltimore, as well as experiences such as a "ride-along" with a police officer, which last year's students found to be the most interesting of the seminar sessions. In addition to brief daily reports on their experiences in Baltimore, the students prepare a lengthy research paper as part of the seminar work. The students also find time to take advantage of some of the cultural and recreational opportunities of Baltimore.

Another urban study and internship program, The Harrisburg Urban Semester (THUS), has been available to Susquehanna students for several years through a consortium of which the University is not a member. The administration and faculty here decided to organize the Baltimore program for several reasons. Enrollment in THUS was limited and the THUS calendar did not coincide with Susquehanna's three terms. Also, the new program gives the University more control over the academic component, and provides a larger, more diverse and comprehensive urban affairs laboratory than does Harrisburg, a city less than one-tenth the size of Baltimore.

On the streets of Baltimore are Susquehannans Sue Edgren '77, Janet Frock '75, Jay Faron '74, Harold Leiter '75, Lena Zehner '75, and Donna Guhn '75. Below, back to camera, Registrar Moore chats with the students in front of 1409 West Lombard, next to Union Square Methodist Church.

In fact, the mere exposure to day-to-day life in Baltimore can be the most significant aspect of the program from the students' point of view, leaving impressions and a perspective that remain throughout their college years and later lives. Statistics and written analysis of the sociology of the city are useful to the expert but can be meaningless to someone who has never experienced the facts and figures "in the flesh."

To quote from the University's brochure on the Baltimore program, "Few aspects of contemporary Western Civilization are as striking as the growth of the modern city. It is at once the great promise and the despair of technological society. In it are housed the best and the worst of our world—great museums are surrounded by slums, symphony orchestras compete with the noise pollution of jet airports, the most talented of our industrial, social and political leadership vie with the shame of unethical practices and the corruption of organized crime."

During their 10 weeks in Baltimore the students must become part of the mass of humanity that populates the city, must jostle with the crowds and suffer through the traffic jams, breathe polluted air, and live in a world of concrete, steel and glass. Baltimore contains seemingly endless blocks of row houses, all similar on the outside, yet inhabited by many different ethnic and racial groups in clearly defined neighborhoods. In addition to coping with physical surroundings that are far from the green trees and lawns to which they are accustomed, the students come in contact with cultures and social mores quite different from their own white middle class backgrounds. Most of the students meet poor blacks for the first time through the Baltimore Urban Term. In the words of one of last year's group, "the tension and fast pace" of city life was a new experience.

Another key facet of the 10 weeks for the students is the experience of living together as a group and becoming a part of the neighborhood community. Housing was provided in the former home of the Rev. Stanley F. Knock Jr., a member of the STEP staff. The house at 1409 West Lombard St. is right next to the Union Square Methodist Church, where the students became welcome visitors and organized a youth choir. Learning to "live, buy food and get along in the city as a group of six students" is valuable, notes Professor Gibson. They must "share a concern for one another that is a necessary part of learning to live in a city," he says. The students noted that much of their learning came from "sharing each other's experiences." Gibson sees the "students' ability to relate to the community" as one of the main successes of the program. The students were not the only people to benefit from this. For the congregation of Union Square Methodist, mostly elderly people, to see a youth choir organized in their midst was an "unbelievably beautiful experience" for them, according to the Rev. Marvin "Tony" Boyles, another STEP staffer.

The central aspect of the program, however, is the internship in which the students really get "where the action is." In addition to work experience and close exposure to urban problems, the internships provide the students access to data and professional people who serve as resources for their research papers.

Psychology major Harold Leiter of Lewistown, Pa. was an intern with the Baltimore Area Council of Boy Scouts of America. His research paper entitled "Inner-City Boys Becoming In Tune with Scouting" dealt with efforts by the Boy Scout organization to make its programs more relevant to youth in the city. He found that urban scouting does not involve the traditional woodland hiking and combatting snake bite, but learning how to read subway maps and cope with rat bites and lead poisoning.

Community Action Agency 24 provided internships for two students, Jay Faron of Summit, N.J., a religion major, and Donna Guhn of Mt. Holly, N.J., majoring in sociology. They worked in a neighborhood trying to revive itself after deteriorating because of damage during the riots of 1968, the exodus of that segment of the population that could afford to move, and the removal of a large residential section to make room for a highway. Miss Guhn studied relocation, and saw its usually demoralizing effects on those forced to leave their homes, while Faron, who studied overall changes in the community, saw its effects on those who remained, in the form of a loss of business for already hard-pressed local commercial establishments.

The health of community business, they learned, is crucial to the health of the neighborhood. Riot damage to stores and competition from new suburban shopping centers caused many neighborhood shops to close. This leaves the poor, who cannot afford transportation to the outlying shopping centers, at the mercy of monopolistic practices by the few remaining neighborhood merchants. To combat this problem the community is trying to refurbish and reopen the large Hollins Market, which a few years ago was quarters for several grocers and a center of community life on market days. The interns saw that the best way to accomplish a project like this is often through the organization and efforts of the community residents themselves, rather than reliance on outside assistance. "People must be made aware that there are ways to get things done and that their involvement can make a difference," says Faron in his research paper.

Lena Zehner, a political science major from Nescopeck, Pa., was an intern with the Program for the Elderly of the Baltimore Legal Aid Bureau. She had firsthand contact with the elderly, a group which is not always immediately associated with the poverty problem but which, quoting from her paper, "is the only identifiable group in the poverty designation whose numbers in the past few years have grown rather than decreased." She specifically studied the Supplemental Security Income program which she found can be a boon to some, but a nightmare to others who fail to receive their checks because of bureaucratic or computer foul-ups. She also learned that a hopeless feeling of being ignored and forgotten is one characteristic of the aged, when several of the elderly people asked her "Why does a young person like you care about the problems of the aged?" Her answer was, in part, "we're all going to be old someday."

Janet Frock, a psychology major from Upper Black Eddy, Pa., and Sue Edgren, a sociology major from Mendham, N.J., both were interns with guidance offices in the city public school system, and came away with the most negative impressions of the six students. They talked with teachers, gave screening tests to diagnose reading problems, and conducted interviews with and examined the records of students with behavioral problems. Their reports read like a catalog of the much-publicized problems of inner-city schools: high school students who can't read; classes too large for teachers to give individual attention to the students; students from crowded home situations that allow them no privacy for study; students who become discipline problems because of their frustration at being unable to keep up academically; students with learning disabilities and emotional problems going undetected while guidance counselors are forced to spend most of their time filling out student schedule forms and course change requests; white teachers with racist attitudes who have no respect for their black students and thus get no respect in return; low morale among the staff caused by disagreement over the issue of a teacher strike. The only hope for improvement the pair could find was more funds and better teachers. In the meantime, wrote Miss Edgren, "the school is doing more harm than good to its students."

While the students' reactions to the Baltimore Urban Term itself were unanimously positive, there was some disillusionment with the seeming inability of academia and society in general to make a real dent in the problems of the inner city. "There are so many problems you can't deal with them all," said one student. Another commented that "problems are more severe and more common than I realized," and expressed some doubt that the return to the campus and course work next semester would produce any key to solutions.

This kind of student reaction does not come as a surprise to the University and STEP staff, however. "Scholars haven't been able to solve the problems by study," admits Gibson, who hopes the Baltimore experience will demonstrate to students that an involvement in the search for answers "has to be seen as a long-range commitment."

Boyles says that disillusionment is common among professional social service people. "The helping professions aren't helping because the professionals come in with improper attitudes," he observes. "It takes a year for a new person to learn the ropes in an agency, then they get frustrated and get promoted or leave." This develops into a cycle, he explains, in which the city becomes a training ground for professionals who move on to other jobs. This is the main reason that STEP has become involved in the Baltimore Urban Term, Boyles notes. "We hope to short circuit the disillusionment—give students a chance to taste it ahead of time," he says. "The students encounter a cultural-psychological setting totally different from what they expected. They see that much of the problem is caused by the professionals, and learn the lesson that 'I might be part of the problem.'"

So the University and STEP do not expect, or even desire, that every student who takes the Baltimore Urban Term will make a career of urban affairs. If a student realizes that he is psychologically unprepared or insufficiently dedicated to tackle inner city problems, that too is a constructive outcome. However, it is hoped that all the students will learn that society's problems are "not something to turn your back on," says Gibson. It is important "to acquaint one segment of society with the 'other America,'" in his words. "An understanding of the inner-city should be shared by all," he says, not just professionals who work there.

The staffs of the University and STEP, as well as the students themselves, believe that there was a tremendous amount of personal growth experienced by all the students involved. "They developed competencies and a feeling of adulthood," according to Gibson. "I saw what life is like and grew to rely more on my own judgment," said one student.

The Susquehanna staff hopes for a feedback effect in which the rest of the campus will benefit from the growth of these students when they return to Selinsgrove next term. Moore says they should "bring back insights which will stimulate fellow students and instructors." College students sometimes tend to be "passive learners," Moore notes, but "hopefully the Baltimore experience creates self-starters." If not carried too far, some disenchantment with the campus on the part of the returning Baltimore group can be beneficial, Gibson believes. "They shouldn't go too far and totally reject theory and the learning of the past," he says, "but some questioning of the meaningfulness of academic material is a good thing." As one of last year's interns commented, "it may put pressure on the faculty to further challenge the students."

A contribution to the program has already been made by the six students who took part in its premiere. The curriculum for the preparatory on-campus seminar next year will include additional material specifically on Baltimore, as the students suggested. The number of students involved will increase next year, with 10 already registered.

Travels in God's Wilderness

by OTTO REIMHERR

Dr. Reinherr is professor of philosophy and religion at Susquehanna and head of the Department. On sabbatical leave last spring, he spent a month taking part in the program of the Albright Institute, Saladin Street, East Jerusalem. This is his brief report.

EQUIPPED WITH KNAPSACKS, sleeping bags, and canteens, we were ready to start from East Jerusalem at 4:30 a.m. for the long journey down and around the Sinai Peninsula, that land bridge and battlefield between Africa and Asia. The purpose of our trip was to survey (subject to military restriction) about 60 of the possible 650 ancient sites on that peninsula. Our party of 30 had been organized by the Albright Institute, the Jerusalem center for the American Schools of Oriental Research. While we were mainly students and teachers, our group was augmented by others of varied backgrounds. Two outstanding Palestinian women, another outstanding Israeli woman from Haifa, a member of the American consular staff in Jerusalem, two members of the staff of the Brethren Service Committee, as well as two American teenagers all made their contribution to our life together. Organizer of the party was the able young archaeologist, Austin Ritterspach, 1973-1974 Fellow at Albright and currently teaching at Elizabethtown College. The instructor and guide was Ora Lipshitz of Hebrew University, Jerusalem—enthusiast, student, and constant visitor of the Sinai. Although a woman, she had been an adviser to the Israeli armed forces as they fought their way across the peninsula.

We climbed into our two opensided Land Rovers which had been packed with food and water for a six-day stay in the desert. We made our descent from the heights of Jerusalem with the cold morning air beating on our faces. Our direction was first to the east to the region of the Dead Sea, and then south following the shore line and the mountains alongside.

Skirting the mountains along the road—mountains that almost come down to the shore of the Dead Sea—we worked our way south after several hours to the region of the Arabah, with our first stop Timna, 30 kms. north of the port of Elat. Timna Valley for almost 6000 years has been a source of copper, exploited in ancient days by the Egyptians and the Romans and now being developed again by the Israelis. This area has mistakenly been thought to be the region of King Solomon's mines. Actually it was an Egyptian center, which is evident in a striking fashion when one examines a corner of the valley where there are remains of a temple dedicated to the Egyptian goddess Hathor.

Our first two days consisted mainly of travel down the east coast of Sinai, seeing Jordan and Saudi-Arabia across the magnificent blue water of the Gulf of Aqaba, and moving down and around to the shores of the Red Sea. Resorts are being developed by the Israeli on this picturesque coast at Nuweibah and Sharm el Sheikh, the latter a key spot in the 1967 war when Nasser threatened a blockade of the Strait of Tiran. At Sharm el Sheikh we paused for a swim and permission from the military to thread our way through the mine fields to begin our travel up the west coast of Sinai, where we could see the land of Egypt to the west, along the shores of the Gulf of Suez.

Our days normally began at 4:30 a.m. and were filled with mile after mile of travel under the hot sun through the wadis, which are soft sandy valleys between the mountains—dry through months and years but during rainstorms, beds for surging streams and violent watercourses. Our nights were spent sleeping on the ground under the clear, star-filled sky, resting on the sands of the softest wadis we could find. Only the descent of darkness ended our trip through sun-filled days when we sipped water constantly to prevent dehydration in the dry desert air.

When we began our drive north we entered first the ghost town of Tor, once the largest settlement in southern Sinai, once inhabited by fishermen and once a quarantine station for Moslem pilgrims heading west from Mecca, probably bringing with them the germs of dread cholera picked up from the infected wells of the holy city. After passing the flaming torches of the oil fields of Abu Rodeis, at Abu Zuneima, slightly to the north, we began our way to the east whereby we would cross the southern third of the peninsula.

Not too many miles from the shore is the remarkable mountain site of Serabit el-Khadem. We made our ascent to the top of the mountain in the heat of the day. This was the most exhausting climb of the trip. The mountain top is striking for three reasons: for the remains of an Egyptian temple of 1800 B.C. still inscribed in praise of the Egyptian kings and the goddess Hathor; for the remains of the turquoise mines which had been worked by the Egyptians, now forgotten because of the poor quality of the turquoise; and finally, inside the mine caves are fascinating inscriptions, remains of writing of Asiatic people who were probably slave laborers for the Egyptians in the mines. On these walls are to be seen the proto-Sinaitic inscriptions, the first evidences of a true alphabet, progenitor of the Hebrew, Phoenician, Greek, Latin, and English alphabets.

Working our way south for the next day we roved through the wadis toward the great oasis of southern Sinai at Feiran, the most settled area of the entire region because of the availability of water. Along the way we had glimpses of Bedouin life. Black garbed women were drawing water at the wells or staying close to huts and tents. Men roamed around on foot or on camel to evaluate the area for the safety of their women. Again and again one would see Bedouin possessions stuck in trees, a place of safekeeping according to Bedouin law. New roads and the profits from smuggling are changing the character of Bedouin life. Landmark for devotion is the whitewashed square chamber with a domed roof, the resting place for the deceased desert sheik, the most sacred of these for Sheik el Nebi Salech.

Focus for everyone who travels in southern Sinai is the Mount of God, Jebel Musa, where according to tradition Moses is believed to have received the revelation of God. Near to the mountain, part of a range, one sees the magnificently wide valley of el-Raha, two miles long and two-thirds of a mile wide, where it is believed the children of Israel encamped while Moses went to the mount. We started at 2:30 a.m. to climb to the top of Jebel Musa, some 7500 feet in the air, to be there at dawn when we could see the majestic early mountain glow of sunrise playing on the reddish rocks of the mountain range.

We made our descent, past the chapel of Elijah, who also made his trip to that holy mount, to the foot of the range where lies the famed monastery of St. Catherine, known for its art treasures and library and from whose collection the Sinaiticus manuscript of the Bible was stolen in 1859. The manuscript now reposes in the British Museum in London. Princeton University has published the definitive volume describing the riches of this place. Stone upon stone in the very fortress wall of the monastery, as well as the building inside, recount the story of changes and movements in civilization since the days when Constantine sent slaves to the region to protect the monks who were huddled in prayer in the caves of the region.

As we threaded our way toward the east again, fascinating scenes did not cease. In wadi after wadi, inscribed on the rocks are the graffiti of travelers who through the centuries have gone that way. While a Sharira pass has served armies including that of Israel in the fight against Egypt in 1967, merchants and pilgrims have passed back and forth from east to west and returned leaving their messages scrawled on the rocks.

Beno Rothenberg of Hebrew University in Jerusalem, a writer on Sinai, has well named this area: "God's Wilderness." Even a quick trip of a week through the sandy desert of Sinai recalls to mind the struggles of our spiritual ancestors, the children of Israel, who were said to have spent 40 years in this waste land. But for the present and for the future, let us hope that Sinai together with the rest of the Middle East will see the fulfillment of the prayer of a Nabatean traveler who cut his words in the rock sometime in the last century B.C. or in the first century A.D., when he wrote: "Peace, Peace, Peace, Peace."

They said "Thanks, Doc" to Dr. William H. Dreibelbis II of Snow Shoe, Pa. on May 29 at a dinner and entertainment held in Our Lady of the Snows Skating Rink. Bill, a graduate of Hahnemann Medical College, began his general practice in Snow Shoe in 1935 when he took over the home and practice of the late Dr. Robert J. Young '26. Except for U.S. Army Medical Corps service in the Pacific during World War II, he has practiced there ever since. Called to particular attention as he and his wife look forward to retirement is Bill's leadership in establishing the Mountaintop Area Medical Center, which opened in February 1972.

Wellington P. Hartman is president of the Retired Service Officers Association and of the Florida State County Veteran Service Officers, both of Broward County. He lives at 2424 N.E. 6th Ave., Wilton Manor, Ft. Lauderdale, Fla. 33305.

Dr. Luke H. Rhoads of Hollidaysburg, Pa., executive director of Allegheny Lutheran Homes and Lutheran Social Services-Allegheny Region, was named "Citizen of the Year" by the West Central Chapter, National Association of Social Workers.

Martha A. Fisher earned her psychologist license in Pennsylvania and has received merit pins for volunteer work at the Sunbury Community Hospital. She lives in Hummels Wharf, Pa.

P. Richard Fisher, elected to Susquehanna's Sports Hall of Fame in 1971, retired this year as acting superintendent of Milton (Pa.) area schools after four decades as a math and science teacher, coach, and administrator in Milton. He was the subject of a feature in The Milton Standard which recounted his career at Selinsgrove H.S. and Susquehanna, his football and basketball coaching achievements at Milton, service as a Navy officer during World War II, and views of secondary education today contrasted with 1934.

'35

Dr. Charles G. Jones performed heart surgery in Truk (in the East Carolines of the Pacific) on a young man who was stabbed in the chest. "The doctors in the U.S. wouldn't believe this," said Charlie, who noted that not one of his assistants had a degree. The victim is now back at work.

Dr. Ralph C. Geigle, now retired as superintendent of schools in Reading, Pa., was honored by the Philadelphia Phillies on July 7 with a "Ralph C. Geigle Day." Ralph, a former Crusader baseball player, threw out the first ball for the Phillies-San Diego game in Veterans Stadium.

Mary Landon Russell, associate professor of music at Lycoming College, was awarded the prestigious Keystone Salute for outstanding civic leadership by the Pennsylvania Federation of Music Clubs. A year ago she was given the Outstanding Alumnus award of Lycoming, from which she graduated when it was Dickinson Junior College.

James B. Finn, former Union County (Pa.) school superintendent and most recently assistant executive director of the Central Susquehanna Intermediate Unit, Col. John W. Oberdorf '34, at right, hadn't been on campus since 1948, but he appeared on May 25 driving his boss, Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, up from Washington to deliver the Commencement address. John has been Hatfield's field representative in his home state of Oregon since his retirement from the U.S. Air Force seven years ago. A much-decorated flyer during World War II, he later was chief of staff of the 18th Air Force and then a teacher of air science and commandant of the ROTC at UCLA. With the Senator and John is his sister Ella Oberdorf Wilson '34, widow of the late Dr. Arthur H. Wilson, longtime SU professor of English, who now makes her home with her son-in-law and daughter, William A. '64 and Anne Wilson Andel '61, Sicklerville, N.J.

The Rev. Dr. John G. Gensel conducted the funeral of Duke Ellington in New York's Cathedral of St. John the Divine on May 27. Some 10,000 mourners jammed the Cathedral to pay tribute to the musician-composer and master of the jazz idiom. On the staff of St. Peter's Lutheran Church in Manhattan and well known as pastor to the jazz community, John spent the Duke's last four hours at his hospital bedside.

James Pearce, principal of East High Street Elementary School, Elizabethtown, Pa., received the American Citation from Conewago Post 329 of the American Legion.

Pierce A. Coryell, Selinsgrove attorney, has resigned after 22 years as solicitor for the Borough of Selinsgrove. He continues in private practice at his residence-office, the historic Governor Simon Snyder home on Market Street.

'46

Janet Rohrbach Robinson was the adjudicator for 60 pianists auditioning for the National Guild of Piano Teachers in Douglas, Ga. during April.

'47

Donald R. Bashore, associate professor of psychology at Bloomsburg State College and pastor of Emmanuel's Reformed Church, Mainville, Pa., will be included in the next edition of "Who's Who in the East." His address is R.D. 3, Bloomsburg, Pa. 17815.

'48

Harriet Gould Mertz, educational media specialist at South Miami (Fla.) Sr. H.S., spent six weeks in Japan this summer participating in the 1974 American Educators in Japan Summer Program. She was the recipient of a Japan Foundation grant.

'49

Charles A. Morris is the new sales manager for the Eastern Region for Burroughs Corp. He and his family have moved to Detroit.

'50

Mildred Leeser Fasold, supervisor of guidance services at Shikellamy H.S., was awarded a General Electric Foundation Guidance Fellowship grant to attend a six-week guidance training program at Boston University.

The Rev. Walter Brandau, pastor of Trinity Lutheran Church, Milton, Pa., led in a joyous rededication of the church edifice in June. It had been heavily damaged during the 1972 flood and was refurbished at a cost of $300,000. First vice president of Trinity's council is Frank Beatty '61, organist is Grover Foehlinger '73, and Charlotte Neuman Martz x'54 chaired the rededication committee.

'52

William Nale is now vice president and controller of Standard Steel, a leading maker of specialty forgings located in Burnham, Pa.

Dr. Waldemar Zagars h retired as professor of economics at Gettysburg College in May. A native of Latvia, he taught at Susquehanna for 10 years before joining the Gettysburg faculty in 1956.

'53

William C. Davenport is now owner of the Hoopy Insurance Agency, Lemoyne, Pa. He was associated with Aetna Casualty & Surety Co. for 19 years. Bill and his wife, the former Margaret Henderson '60, and their three children live in Camp Hill, Pa.

'54

James "Mike" Rising, former director of the physical plant at Susquehanna, is now supervisor of construction for Weis Markets Inc., Sunbury. Mike is also the new chairman of the Snyder County Democratic Committee.

'55

The Rev. Charles W. Coates is associate director, community services to the aging, for Tressler-Lutheran Service Associates. His duties include consultation, counseling and community organization primarily with Lutheran pastors and congregations.

Dr. Malcolm E. Musser hc, former basketball coach and dean of men at Bucknell University, was inducted into the Pennsylvania Sports Hall of Fame. He was also honored at a dinner by surviving members of Lewisburg High School's 1919 football team, which Mal coached to an undefeated season.

mittee at the association's annual convention in Atlantic City.

Maj. Gerald W. Musselman is serving as a communications-electronics program manager at Headquarters, Air Force Communications Service, Richards-Gebaur AFB, Mo. Prior to returning to the United States from Germany, Gerry and his family spent two weeks touring through Kenya and Tanzania, East Africa, on a photographic safari. Current address is 12735 Sycamore, Grandview, Mo. 64030.

'59

Mary Davis Heisey wrote an article, "Thank You for Coming," which was published on the editorial page of the June 1974 issue of Decision. The article concerns an experience she and her husband had while vacationing in England last summer.

'60

Harry Powers is vice principal in charge of student and personnel services at New Providence H.S. in New Jersey. He was previously coordinator of pupil personnel services in Chatham.

'61

Dr. Richard E. Derrick has opened a new office for the general practice of dentistry at 3 Mountain Ave., Mendham, N.J. 07945.

Dr. Marvin L. Brubaker, assistant professor of mathematics at Moravian College, was named chairman of the department beginning July 1, 1974.

Leslie R. Butler has been promoted to vice president and assistant to vice chairman, Real Estate & Consumer Finance, of First Pennsylvania Corp. in Philadelphia.

'63

Madelyn Valunas, library instructor at Shippensburg State College, has been promoted to assistant professor in the library effective September 1.

The Rev. Frederick I Fisher is now pastor of the recently-formed Hope Lutheran Church in Cherryville, Pa. He formerly served St. Peter's and Salem churches in Schuylkill County.

Usually referred to as the Founder's Cross, this stone monument was placed in front of Selinsgrove Hall at Susquehanna many years ago to honor Dr. Benjamin Kurtz, who was instrumental in establishing Missionary Institute and served as its first superintendent, 1858-1865. The name Susquehanna University was adopted in 1895 along with expansion of the curriculum. A large plaque on the back of the monument identifies Kurtz as the founder and also includes the inscription, SI MONUMENTUM REQUIRIS, CIRCUMSPICE (If you seek his monument, look around you). This quotation has been credited to several historic personages but its real origin was with the son of Christopher Wren, who composed the tribute placed on the architect's tomb in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, upon his death in 1723. Translated from the Latin, the complete text reads: "Beneath lies buried the founder of this Church and City, Christopher Wren, who lived for more than ninety years, not for himself, but for the public good. Reader, if you seek his monument, look around you." The area around the Kurtz memorial was recently dressed up with new landscaping by Alan F. Straubel '66, a landscape designer operating under the slogan, The Natural Look.

SU Sports

by PETE SILVESTRI

THE PROGNOSTICATOR does not have to go too far out on the proverbial limb to predict winning seasons for Crusader men's fall sports teams. All three fielded young squads last fall and will be well stocked with returning lettermen.

The soccer team, which enjoyed its best record in Susquehanna history last year, and the cross country squad, which rebounded from 1972's 1-11 mark to post an 8-5 card in '73 should be strong again. And Jim Hazlett seems to have recruited the necessary ingredient—big linemen—to turn last fall's 2-7 football team into a strong group that will aim for the first winning grid campaign here since 1970. Only three football starters have graduated, and 27 lettermen are returning.

This spring Hazlett concentrated on attracting strong linemen to Susquehanna, and he was successful. The newcomers include Pat Lowe of Garden City, N.Y., transfer from Nassau Community College, 6' 225 lbs.; Gabe Develli of Sharpsville, Pa., 6' 225 lbs.; Mike Piersol of Sinking Springs, Pa., 6'6" 235 lbs.; and Kevin Zumpetta of Moorestown, N.J., 6'1" 230 lbs., all of whom are bigger than anyone on the 1973 roster. Hazlett also wanted linebackers, and got some good ones, including Rick Koch of Levittown, Pa., 5'10" 175 lbs., and Joe LoCastro of Barrington, N.J., a transfer from Drexel University which dropped football, 6' 210 lbs.

Hopefully some of these recruits will shore up the Crusader defensive unit, which was the weakest in the Northern College Division of the Middle Atlantic Conference last fall, giving up an average of 284.4 yards per conference game.

The development of the defense should be the key to the success of the team, as the offense last season demonstrated an ability to move the ball. The main cog in the offense will again be 5'10" 175 lb. running back Tim Lawlor of Shillington, Pa., whose season total of 669 yards last year was the most for a freshman in Susquehanna's long football history. Also returning are a pair of experienced quarterbacks, John Bird of Bloomsburg, Pa. and Mike Buterbaugh of Gibsonia, Pa.; fullback Jim Camut of Johnstown, Pa.; last season's top pass receiver Jeff Steltz of Wyomissing, Pa. at split end; and the entire offensive line led by tackle Bob Brett of Roslyn, Pa. The only graduate from last year's offensive unit was halfback Dave Dagle.

The Crusaders will also get points from the toe of Chuck Smeltz of Sunbury. He has booted 58 consecutive PATs, not far behind the NCAA record of 65 set last season by Greg Clark, since graduated from Appalachian State. Smeltz can kick for distance as well as with accuracy and consistency. He set a school record last season with 10 field goals, and tied a school mark by connecting on a 47-yarder.

Top veterans on the defensive eleven are 6'2" 200 lb. tackle Tony Plastino, of Lancaster Pa., last season's leading tackler; Smeltz, a 5'10" 210 lb. tackle when not place-kicking; 5'10" 175 lb. linebacker Jim Reyle of Newburgh, N.Y.; and safety Pete Rambo of Philadelphia, whose ability far exceeds his size, 5'7" 150 lbs. Rambo's foot is also a defensive weapon. He was one of the top punters in the MAC last year with an average of 36.3 yards. The defense suffered most from graduation, losing Mike Fabian, whom Hazlett calls the best defensive back he's ever coached, and rugged end Tom Jeffrey.

Hazlett believes the team has "a good chance of at least breaking even," but says he is "not predicting a fabulous record" because of lack of size among the veteran interior defensive linemen and linebackers. However, if newcomers work out in those areas, the Crusaders "may be strong."

There will be several new faces on the Susquehanna coaching staff next year, although one of them may look familiar to visiting alumni. Dick Purnell '58, formerly coach at Shikellamy High School in Sunbury, will be a volunteer football assistant. New full-time staff members are Bob Muirhead, formerly coach at Wofford College, who will be head track coach and a football assistant; Bill Frey, a recent M.A. recipient at Western Michigan, who will be an assistant in track and football; and Connie Delbaugh, also a former Shikellamy coach, who will be field hockey and women's tennis coach. Also, Bill Kepner, a former Elizabethtown soccer star and now principal at Penn's Creek Elementary School, will be interim soccer coach while Dr. Neil Potter is on sabbatical in Taiwan.

Although the best campaign in the school's 14-year soccer history (6-3-4) should be a tough act to follow, Potter nevertheless predicts that this fall's booters "will play as well if not better." Of course, Potter notes that it's easy for him to say so, since he won't be around when the action starts. Interim coach Kepner will have a veteran group to work with, including 18 returning lettermen. Last year's squad included only five seniors.

For the second straight year the key man to replace is a center fullback named Eickhoff. Last year it was the graduation of Karl Eickhoff that left a hole there. It was filled in 1973 by his brother Rich, who graduated in June after making the all-conference team. There are no more Eickhoffs available, but competition for the position among several experienced players is sure to produce a capable performer.

Also gone from a defense that was crucial to last year's success is halfback Bill Atkinson. Goalie Chris Blackmon of New Britain, Pa., returns, however. In regular season games last season he gave up an average of only 1.2 goals, as the team allowed only 15 goals in 12 games to set a new school regular season record. The Crusaders' five shutouts is also a school mark.

While the defense may have been weakened by graduation, the offense was not. Returning linemen include two of last year's top three men in goals and assists—Kurt Kohler of Grosse Point Woods, Mich. (15) and Bob Hazel of Chesapeake City, Md. (14). The Crusaders will have a "fast line with the most scoring potential of any team at Susquehanna the past eight years," says Potter. Returning lettermen at halfback include co-captains Bob Carr of Hanover, N.J. and John Waddell of Reedsville, Pa.

The incoming freshmen include six all-conference selections, and the first black to play soccer at Susquehanna, Essy Joseph, a native of Haiti.

The field hockey team has nowhere to go but up, after an 0-7-1 campaign in 1973. The Crusader women have won only two games in the last three years, and new field hockey coach Mrs. Delbaugh inherits a team that has not enjoyed a winning season since the 5-0 slate of 1962, although the .500 mark was attained in 1963, '64, '65 and '67.

* * *

The cross country team, which begins and ends its home races on the track before the football fans, may again enjoy more success than the gridders. All the runners from last year's successful group are returning, including pace-setter Jeff Yoder of Mt. Carmel, Pa., who continues to improve as he demonstrated by breaking his own University record in the mile run with the track team this spring. Dan Ditzler (Rosemont, Pa.), Dennis Enders (New Cumberland, Pa.), Joe Cramer (Toms River, N.J.), Ray Everngam (Baltimore, Md.) Woody McEvoy (Toms River, N.J.) and Scott Cree (Watchung, N.J.).

Although the schedule has not been finalized as this goes to press, the Rugby Club plans seven or eight weekend contests this fall, with home matches slated for the new field opened last spring on Sassafras Street. Contests are expected with clubs from Dickinson, Franklin & Marshall, Lafayette, Moravian, West Chester State, Bucknell, Penn State and Mt. St. Mary's.

Since its inception in 1971 the Rugby Club has been highly successful under the direction of founder-player-coach Joe Stagers, a Susquehanna history instructor. The ruggers play both a fall and a spring season. After losing most of its matches in the spring of 1971, the club has been over the .500 mark in each season since, including a perfect 7-0 card in the spring of 1973 and a fine 8-2-1 showing last spring.

The ruggers concluded their season last spring by taking second place in the 12-team Schaefer Tournament held at Lehigh University. The campaign saw two victories each against Bucknell, Dickinson and Franklin & Marshall, a win and a tie with Lafayette, and a triumph over Moravian. Both losses were to West Chester, including the title game of the Schaefer Tournament.

Coach Stagers notes that the club is usually stronger in the spring when it gets the benefit of several athletes who are busy with football in the fall. However, he still expects more wins than losses this fall.

The roster includes: Dave Allison '75 (Wayne, Pa.), prop; Tom Jacobi '75 (Camp Hill, Pa.), wing forward; George Epstein '75 (Levittown, Pa.), second row; Glenn Stoudt '77 (Reading, Pa.), hooker; Barry Hartshorn '77 (Stroudsburg, Pa.), winger; Mat Creutzmann '76 (Cresco, Pa.), winger; Tom Monastra '76 (Goshen, N.Y.), fly-half; David Chambers '77 (West Caldwell, N.J.), scrum-half; Jacob Klein '77 (Middletown, N.Y.), prop; Dave Karner '76 (Scotch Plains, N.J.), center; Kent Houser '76 (Lewistown, Pa.), fullback; Tom Jeffrey '74 (Havertown, Pa.), number-8; Dave Wick '71 and Dave Dunn '72, who are living in the area, second row.

Two late spring sports items that missed the last issue: Javelin thrower Glenn Levensgood of Gilbertsville, Pa. traveled to Eastern Illinois University the last week in May to become the first Crusader ever to enter the NCAA College Division track meet. He took sixth place in Division III javelin competition and earned an "All-American" certificate. Pitcher-outfielder Doug Brinkman of Glen Cove, N.Y., who graduated in June with four baseball letters to his credit, was given honorable mention on the All-MAC team, announced in June. He had been a first team choice as a sophomore.

Some interesting pictures emerge with the opening of school. Moving into dorms, Dad fixing the bike seat, the new speed bumps on campus roads, care of one's favorite avocado plant. And at Opening Convocation, those honored with degrees line up with President Weber. The Rev. H. Lee Hebel '48, Perkasi, Pa., D.D., Edwin B. Bronner, Haverford College librarian and historian, Pd.D., The Rev. Gilbert V. Hartke, Catholic University drama department chairman who also delivered the address, Litt.D. At lower right, business manager Tom Dodge receives the $500 Wilkinson Award for administrative excellence. Jim Bates '75 of Danville, Pa. was given the $500 Lindback Award. Other presentations: John Schwartz '76, Bristol, Pa., Stine-Robison Mathematics Prize, Timothy Blair '76, Blairs Mills, Pa., Elizabeth Evster Music Award, Susan Gordon '75, Johnstown, Pa. and Jim Jordan '75, Frackville, Pa., Presser Foundation Music Scholarships, Alpha Xi Delta and Phi Sigma Kappa, scholarship trophies. Ten baccalaureate degrees were conferred and 158 University Scholars were recognized.

ON OUR COVER: The beginning of another year—Susquehanna's one hundred seventeenth. And some other photos are opposite.

Inside, this quarter we feature the Report of the President for 1973-74. The Report reveals a healthy institution which remains committed to liberal arts ideals while expanding its services to the current generation of career-oriented students. An institution operating in the fiscal black while alert to the need for careful vigilance and new sources of income. We commend the Report to your reading—and suggest that you'll also find the article on admissions of great interest.

All Susquehanna alumni are reminded that this is the season for submitting suggestions to the Nominating Committee for action in January. All suggestions must be received by the Committee (c/o the Alumni Office) by January 1. Required information: name and class of candidate, address, occupation, supporting comments, name and class of person making the suggestion. To be elected by mail ballot are five members-at-large to three-year terms on the Association's Executive Board.

REPORT OF THE PRESIDENT 1973-74

INTRODUCTION

Susquehanna is, beyond question, a fine school. Perhaps this was made most evident in a team meeting the last night your visitors were on campus. To a person, each member of the team expressed satisfaction with the thought that his child might be a Susquehanna student. Can there be a greater test?

THE UNIVERSITY was very pleased with this statement contained in the report submitted by the visiting team of evaluators representing the Middle States Association at the conclusion of their intensive three-day examination of the University last January. These periodic visits from Middle States, every ten years, are used to examine the academic programs of colleges and universities and to recommend reaccreditation. A letter was forthcoming from the Middle States Association in June formally announcing the reaccreditation of the University for the next ten years.

The worth of such an evaluation by a peer group from a variety of other colleges and universities rests with its ability to transmit to us observations which we ourselves are prone to overlook or to take for granted. To be judged by one's peers is in the best tradition of the American system and, for Susquehanna, it has provided insight for future growth and development. We tend to be rather smug about what we have accomplished and need to be awakened to the changing nature of higher education and the fact that complacency often results in ground lost and the cutting edge dulled.

While the past decade has been one of significant growth and development on our campus, and has been accomplished with a sense of pride and satisfaction, what was done in the past is not necessarily a guarantee for a successful future. The Middle States Report speaks to this! If there is one overriding theme that dominates thought in higher education today it is that the "good times" of the 1960s are over, perhaps forever. The days of an abundant supply of qualified students, the infusion of funds for construction from Federal and private sources, and the generally favorable cost of a college education have given way to greater competition among an increasing and more diverse number of post-secondary institutions competing for a dwindling pool of college-age students, an almost complete withdrawal of funds by the Federal government for facilities construction, and the anguish of the middle income parent attempting to find the means of paying for post-secondary educational opportunities which have increased in cost by 40 percent over the past five years.

Inflation has not been any less kind to Susquehanna and we have witnessed an increase of from 7-9 percent annually in our costs, but the more urgent concern would appear to be the reluctance of many institutions to adapt themselves to today's educational needs. I am convinced that there is a place for Susquehanna in higher education during the years ahead and that our type of institution, if sufficiently motivated, can play an even more prominent role than before. The challenge is a willingness to examine present methods of operation and programs and to emerge with a clearer vision of what higher education must become.

Until recently, the pressures confronting higher education were those which any business or professional person would be thankful to face. The demand for our services outran the supply of openings available at the four-year institutions, a constant flow of funds was available, and interest rates on borrowed funds at 6-7 percent stimulated manageable growth. More importantly, the traditional methodology in higher education was sufficient to satisfy all but the most active learners. As the 1970s unfolded, however, the quick erosion which took place at many four-year colleges in terms of both enrollment and mission resulted from a complacency and an imprecise understanding of higher education today. Many institutions remained wedded to outmoded curricular patterns and techniques emphasizing the traditional classroom approach. Management techniques were even less precise and were predicated on straight line budget projections geared to satisfying "the need of the moment." Funds were generated for almost every conceivable project with little attention given to long-range budgetary effects or to the merit of such programs in a total institutional sense. In a nutshell, growth and development were fragmented—each teacher enshrined in his own niche, and little attention given to a total institutional approach to both program planning and personnel involvement. While what was done was safe and accepted, the question must be asked whether this perpetuation of the status quo is sufficient in today's rapidly changing world. As viewed by the visiting Middle States Committee, the obvious answer, with which I concur, is "No."

In defense of the status quo I believe we all have hoped that things would settle down following the recent turmoil on college campuses and that the four-year liberal arts colleges would return to what we knew prior to the trauma of the last half-decade. Even if this false hope had been confirmed, a return to normalcy would have neglected an evaluation of the facts. Enrollments at many colleges are down, costs continue to increase, and more and more students question the worth and expense of a college education. We are entering a most competitive situation in which students are attracted to those campuses offering superior facilities and challenging programs. With regard to the former, our facilities are good and the addition of a new physical education building will serve to place Susquehanna well ahead of many institutions of a similar size and nature. In the latter category, programs, we are solid but traditional and, as Middle States points out, our attempts to resolve curricular tensions have been somewhat "situational" or "cosmetic" and have avoided the more fundamental question of studying a redefinition of the teaching-learning process. It is in this area where much of our efforts must be expended in future years.

My confidence is enhanced by the ability of our faculty which, as noted by Middle States, is competent and sincerely interested in providing better educational opportunities. Our need however, is to attack the fragmentation which exists within the University and to broaden the vision of the various disciplines so that this vision transcends departmental lines and involves our faculty and staff in a more total institutional pattern of thinking. To meet the most prominent concerns of the Middle States summary, we must plan, develop and implement better programs based on our liberal-education philosophy which are, in some cases, viable alternatives to prevailing discipline-based curricula. As Dean Reuning points out, "the point of departure (for new curriculum development) must be the logic of our curriculum development up to this point. I believe that it is safe to say that the objectives we had in mind three years ago (for the 3-3 program) have not as yet materialized as fully as we had hoped. This is especially true with the Core program. One must not lose sight of the fact that this program and the major programs have relied too much on tradition and traditional approaches in teaching and subject matter taught. . . . I have a feeling that in both cases the institution's response to change has been spotty if not insufficient." Regardless of the changes that are made and the new programs to be explored in curriculum revitalization, the basic need for a core of knowledge taught within a liberal arts framework will be preserved. As Dean Reuning also states, "we must still be able to communicate effectively, analyze critically and see present day concerns in perspective and interrelationship." The issue seems obvious, in today's educational environment the disciplines are an inadequate basis for the organization of liberal learning!

While all of us associated with the University will be involved in change, the faculty is the key to change. Traditionally, the teacher is a scholar who conveys information to others. His methodologies and enthusiasm are related to his discipline. It may well be, however, that in the future the faculty member's role will be more that of a "co-learner," "group leader" or "counselor." Hence, the faculty's role may need redefinition in the future.

Our faculty and staff are extremely competent and I am certain that most will rise to the occasion and assist Susquehanna in building an even more viable educational program. The future may bring with it some dislocations of staff, faculty and resources, particularly as we strive to find better approaches to education while enrollment patterns change. I stress here that change for its sake alone will not be tolerated. Change must be thoroughly planned and thought through. What is done may not have total unanimity on campus, but you can be assured that all elements of the campus will be involved in the planning stages.

In summary, the type of program we have in mind is reflected in a pilot project now sponsored by a consortium of educational organizations, including the American Association of Colleges. We hope to participate in this program but, if not, its perspective is important to us. The program has the following point of view which, I believe, is applicable to Susquehanna:

1) The organization of knowledge which more adequately reflects the inter-connectedness of human experience and the systemic nature of the world, and which exhibits an awareness of the dependence upon the multiple modes of knowing.

2) Educational experiences which can help students acquire patterns of thinking and understanding which contribute to their capacity to shape purposefully our physical and social world in our time, while developing in them a sense of calling, in which life and career are integrated.

3) Programs for faculty development and self-renewal designed to support sustained, effective involvement in the change process.

What is to come will require, as stated earlier, a complete review of resource allocation—both personnel and financial. The involvement of the alumni and friends of Susquehanna will be crucial. We must strive to achieve a sense of "community" in which all elements of the University community will play an active role. To perform as we intend, it will be necessary to ask more faculty, staff members and directors to involve themselves to a greater extent than is now the case. Most will respond, and here the extra effort will be more than compensated for by being involved in a more meaningful educational program. Funds will be needed, but we are confident that new programs of merit will attract increasing support from alumni, friends and private philanthropic groups.

The Middle States Association has emphasized that Susquehanna is at a "crossroads." This, I believe, is true of most institutions. How well we respond to this challenge will determine our future. I believe Susquehanna will respond.

ADMISSIONS

ENROLLMENT AT SUSQUEHANNA held steady during the 1973-74 year at about 1400 students. The recruitment of incoming students for the fall of 1974 signalled, once again, the University's continuing ability to attract a full class of freshmen during a time when many other institutions are experiencing difficulty in meeting quotas. We note an increase of interest in both the liberal arts and business fields for the coming year. The beginning enrollment for September should include about 440 new students and a total student body of over 1400.

As with most institutions, the University has experienced some deterioration in the number of applications received. From a high figure of over 1400 in 1972 the number of applications slipped to about 1200 this past year. The quality of the student body, however, appears to be about the same. Almost 80 percent of these students come to us from the upper two-fifths of their graduating secondary school classes.

This matter of enrollment is one that the University must address itself to over the next several years. As the pool of college age students levels off, it remains to be seen whether Susquehanna can remain at its present enrollment level and retain quality. The quality of the educational program is what attracts students, and the University's willingness to experiment with new but sound approaches may be the determining factor.

Revised estimates of the number of students expected to enroll at institutions of higher learning over the next several decades, from the Carnegie Commission Report, point toward an increasingly competitive situation for the private college. The Commission foresees 1.5 million fewer students in 1980 than originally estimated, and 3.4 million fewer students in the year 2000. In Pennsylvania, for the fall of 1973, 10,000 more students enrolled at all colleges and universities than during the previous year, but private four-year institutions evidenced a net decline of 347 students.

Susquehanna can take pride in the fact that its enrollment remains oversubscribed but, at the same time, must assert a more aggressive posture in its recruitment efforts. Again, I stress that our ability to remain viable will, in large measure, be predicated on our ability to design and carry forward sound educational programs worthy of attracting students. This must be accomplished with a respect for the liberal arts philosophy and with an eye toward retaining the liberal arts as a sound and necessary base for education.

It was necessary for the University to announce a 5 percent increase in costs for the coming year, thereby bringing tuition to $2265 and room and board to $525 and $575 respectively. It costs a student about $3500 per year to attend Susquehanna today. Although the average increase in the cost of running the University rose by almost 9 percent over the past year, the Board of Directors felt that to pass this entire increase on to the student and his parents might erode Susquehanna's competitive position. The difference in costs not covered by the added tuition charge is compensated for through general cost-saving measures and budget deductions in non-educational areas.

As mentioned earlier, the cost of attending Susquehanna is moderate in relation to many other institutions, but tuition has still increased from $1900 to $2265 over the past three years. The burden of financing a college education is felt more severely by the middle income family where available sources of financial aid are less than adequate. The New York State Board of Regents has estimated that "two-thirds of the seniors of the State University of New York who are from families with annual incomes of $20,000 or less are in debt and facing the prospect of having to repay an average of $2535 in loans that they have borrowed to pay for their education." Seniors at private colleges with generally higher tuition and fees appear to be even further in debt.

As indicated above, the emergence of financial aid as an important factor in a student's ability to attend college has resulted in a relatively new and specialized administrative position at most colleges called the financial aid office. Susquehanna, like most other colleges, has staff to work with students and their parents in arranging financing for college. About 40 percent of the students attending Susquehanna receive some form of financial aid. Since the University draws heavily from middle income families, over 150 of the incoming class of 400 will receive financial aid directly administered by the University and its Financial Aid Office. Many other students, of course, will be partially funding their education with supplemental money from other sources.

The class graduated from Susquehanna in June represents a case in point. Ninety-eight members of this class received over $302,000 in University-administered financial aid during their four years on campus. Such aid consisted of funds directly from the University allocated as outright grants or loans, funds from endowment earmarked for particular types of students or those in certain areas of study, work-study jobs, and the various other Federal programs administered by the University.

If a student evidences sufficient need, the Financial Aid Office then attempts to put together a "package" involving a combination of grant, loan and work-study funds. It is critical that this mix be calculated carefully, so that the student is not overly burdened with loans which must be repaid for many years to come. During 1973-74, the University's financial aid office administered $1,100,000 in total financial aid funds.

Students making application for financial aid are screened in a standardized manner from information supplied to the College Scholarship Service, a clearinghouse in Princeton, New Jersey. The amount of parental income is calculated along with the amount reasonably expected in support from the parents and from the student's summer earnings. The financial aid office must then match the student's remaining need with funds available here.

In future years the role of financial aid will become even more acute as colleges and universities witness further cost increases. If financial aid can increase at least in proportion to costs, this gap or cost differential between the public and private institutions will not widen further. Additionally, the University can keep pace and continue to offer admission to students from all socio-economic backgrounds. Over the past three years, the amount of aid administered by Susquehanna University has increased by over 40 percent, thereby keeping pace with inflation. Our goal must be to be certain that this trend is maintained.

Among those entering Susquehanna with the class of 1978 were these sons and daughters of alumni, first row: Michael Herman (Max Herman '57), Norristown, Pa.; Donna Wissinger (Donald '50 and Flora Barnhart Wissinger '51), Hollidaysburg, Pa.; Kevin Spangler (Jacob Spangler '52), Lebanon, N.J.; Lynn Marek (Gardiner Marek '51), Atlantic Highlands, N.J.; Ricky Koch (Andrew '50 and Maude Jones Koch '49), Levittown, Pa. Second row: C. Gilbert Zlock (Evan '49 and Frances Lybarger Zlock '49), Levittown, Pa.; Glenn Albert (Walter '55 and Claire Rosengarten Albert '56), Woodbury, N.J.; Lewis Morrow (William Morrow '34), New Bloomfield, Pa.; Robert Manning (Everett '50 and Jeanne Kahler Manning '50), Livingston, N.J.; Karen Hackman (Florence Stuber Hackman '77), Selinsgrove. Third row: Peter Strickland (James Strickland '45), Lewisburg, Pa.; Janet Heaton (Blair Heaton '46), Selinsgrove; William Poust III (William Poust Jr.), Camp Hill, Pa.; Lawrence Hutchison (David Hutchison '61), Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio. Missing: William Bartle (Russell Bartle '52), Johnstown, Pa.; Susan Cederborg (Paul Cederborg '47), Endicott, N.Y.; Paul Staller (Tom Staller '51), Marlton, N.J.

STUDENTS

THE STUDENT BODY at Susquehanna is probably as good a cross-section of Middle America as one can imagine. Over 90 percent of the students come from Pennsylvania, New York and New Jersey, but the proportion of those from Pennsylvania has dropped from 70 percent to 52 percent over the past ten years. As shown by class ranks, our students achieved well in high school with about 80 percent graduating in the upper two-fifths of their classes.

Student interest in broad curriculum areas has remained relatively stable in recent years. The number of students in liberal arts has remained stable at about 70 percent of the total student body. However, there has been a change in the distribution of majors within the liberal arts. While interest in chemistry and physics has remained about the same over the past four years, student interest in biology has increased significantly while that in geology has shown more modest advances. In non-science areas, accounting and the business program in general show greater interest, and communications and theatre arts, religion and Spanish also have a greater proportion of students now than four years ago. Interest has declined in English, history, mathematics and most modern languages. While such trends are often inconclusive and tend to be cyclical, they do provide some idea of the flexibility needed in higher education today to meet the demands of students.

Student choices of career programs, of course, are often reflections of current trends at the national level and the availability of employment in the various fields. We find more interest in career-oriented areas of study, probably a result of a tight job market for liberal arts students and the knowledge that business majors are, at this point, more employable. The enrollment pictures at graduate schools, too, has influence on the course of study chosen by undergraduates. While total graduate school enrollments nationally increased by about 4 percent this past year, the growth rate in Ph.D.'s so evident during the 1960s has now been slowed by a deteriorating job market in many areas compounded by the Federal government's cutback in its fellowship programs.

The University has recognized the need to place additional emphasis on career counseling and guidance. During the past year a career conference program was initiated in an effort to bring to the campus men and women to speak about employment and career opportunities in the various professions. This program will be expanded further in coming years so that students may be well apprised of such opportunities as they plan their academic programs. A major goal of the career conference idea is to influence the freshman and sophomore about opportunities available so that by the time of graduation they will have been able to choose courses and programs helpful to them. We believe in career guidance, but exercise caution in too-strongly advocating rigid career preparation. Susquehanna believes that a liberal arts education is a necessary base for living in and adjusting to modern society. As a result, career preparation is important for many students, but we will continue to present such opportunities within the framework of a liberal arts education. The important distinction here is the education of young men and women properly prepared to quickly adjust to the changes in modern society as opposed to preparing one for a particular job!

The changing nature of the student personnel office is reflected in the individualistic needs and aspirations of the student body. As the University becomes more aware of the need to diversify its educational program, to offer more and varied off-campus study experiences for students, the role of student personnel becomes more that of counselor and facilitator. More time is taken in assisting the student to devise and meet personal educational objectives as opposed to the traditional role of "enforcement" of rules and regulations. As I have stated in the past, the maturity of today's undergraduate permits him to go further in designing or tailoring his own educational program and environment during the four years spent at Susquehanna.

FACULTY

THE REPORT of the Middle States Association on the nature and condition of the University has pointed out that Susquehanna is, as indeed are most private colleges, at a crossroads. The report concludes that "Susquehanna has done little by way of systematic inquiry into its own functioning as a center of learning." A sense of urgency for self-renewal and a constant reappraisal of the curriculum must be emphasized. In interpreting the Middle States Report, I believe that Susquehanna is well-commended for the job done, but there is the caution that this may lead to a contentment which cannot be tolerated in higher education today. Recognition is given that the University "has risen markedly in its level of scholarship in terms of faculty credentials, publications, student research, computer capability and the like. It has recognized that inspired teaching at the undergraduate level requires fresh learning at the frontiers of knowledge, and the Board of Directors has been willing to put aside funds for support of research." It is all too easy to live on a reputation and easier yet to be fooled that this reputation can sustain the University in future years.

In the development of curricular patterns which continue to attract students, there is always the urge of opting for those emphasizing occupationalism, since current student patterns lean strongly in this direction. The danger here is in seriously eroding the liberal arts base which has been nurtured by Susquehanna. At the same time, there would seem to be a comparable danger in relying solely on a classical curriculum in the liberal arts which, in turn, may no longer attract the necessary number of students to the campus. Dean Reuning has recognized the need for change, but with continuity.

If funds are to be attracted and other new sources of revenue uncovered, the University must recognize the changing nature of higher education and the aspirations and life styles of potential students. Future support will be in direct proportion to distinctiveness and program validity and will no longer be predicated only on the strength of traditional modes of study. The Ford Foundation, in its recent Venture Fund Program, selected those institutions which have demonstrated an ability for "institutional openness, a willingness to experiment, and a desire and capacity to try new things in new ways."

Susquehanna is making a good start in this direction. The inception of the 3-3 curriculum, now in its fourth year, provides greater flexibility in programming and should assist us in modernizing the curriculum. The evolution of practicums, internships and other educational experiences which move the learning process from the classroom into the real world and provide students with opportunities to apply the theory taught in the classroom have brought a whole new dimension to the educational process. The theory here is that much of what a student needs to know can be taught in the classroom, but the extension, interpretation and application of this knowledge must be pursued in the much broader context of liberal education and society. Emphasis will be placed on broadening the sometimes rigid discipline-related frame of reference and encourage the steady and systematic development of the powers of inquiry, judgment, deliberation and communication in a comprehensive context more appropriate to the nature of liberal education. More cross-disciplinary courses and team-taught sessions will be stressed. As the student becomes more active in formulating his own educational experience, the role of the teacher becomes more that of a participant and facilitator rather than one who monopolizes what is often a one-way dialog with his students.

The faculty member is clearly the key to any changes which take place on campus. Traditionally, the teacher-scholar has been one who has conveyed to others information about his discipline while, at the same time, contributing personally to the advancement of knowledge. As the student becomes more active in the learning process and assumes a greater role in organizing his schedule, the role of teacher may be altered to that of "coordinator," "facilitator," or "co-learner." Learning situations increase in frequency which take the instructor and student away from the traditional lecture room atmosphere and controlled situations. Retraining faculty and staff to cope with this new and exciting learning environment will have to be provided for. Like most changes in education, alterations in the learning atmosphere should be gradual and have provisions for constant evaluation and critique.

Another major trend which we see coming relates to the concept of regionalization and interinstitutional cooperation among colleges within a given area. Informal meetings are now regularly held with Bucknell, Lycoming and other neighboring institutions to determine how cooperation can be enhanced. While fiscal concerns no doubt stimulated interest in such cooperation, another real advantage is combining the strengths of the neighboring colleges in providing a better educational product. It is still too early to determine the likely chances of success for such ventures since institutional autonomy and bureaucratic barriers tend to negate rapid progress. There is no doubt, however, that cooperation makes sense and can be accomplished in such a way so that each institution retains its own identity yet benefits from the relationship through cross enrollments of students, exchanges of faculty, and the elimination of certain duplicate facilities and courses on neighboring campuses. What has been accomplished already has been modest but significant: an interlibrary loan program with regional colleges and universities; an annual joint venture by the English and modern language departments at Bucknell and Susquehanna in sponsoring a Humanities Colloquium; the enrolling of Susquehanna students at Bucknell in astronomy and physics courses; an agreement among a number of colleges and universities in Central Pennsylvania to initiate joint programs in rural studies and an internship experience at the Selinsgrove State School.

In addition to responding to the needs of the 1400 full-time students on the campus, the University continues its active interest and involvement in the affairs of the region. The Evening Program for Adults provides educational opportunities to a growing number. During 1973-74, the enrollment rose to about 180. More than 20 courses were offered, both for credit and non-credit. Certificate programs for supervisors are now offered in management and for professional and para-professional personnel in community mental health. This extra dimension to the regular academic program provides both a more efficient use of University facilities and personnel and recognition of the broadened role of the institution in serving the expanding educational needs of our region. Similarly, a two-year Associate Degree Program, initiated last fall, will enroll about 50 students this coming year. Offering two degrees, an associate degree in the Arts and in Applied Science (business administration), this program fills a void for the post-secondary student wishing to pursue further study. Eventually, we hope that the Associate Degree Program will filter some students into the regular four-year program of the University.

President Weber looks at Susquehanna's very first associate degree diploma with its recipient, Carey N. Sheaffer of Selinsgrove. With some previously-earned credits, he met the requirements and was conferred with the associate in applied science (business administration) at Opening Convocation—only a year after the program was offered. Sheaffer is a computer operations supervisor for the Tri-County National Bank in Middleburg.

The flexibility of the two year PACE program (Program in Adult Continuing Education) is designed for those who wish to gain an associate degree by combining work and evening study. Admission is open to all and is not based on previous academic performance alone, but on aptitude and a desire to learn. As modern society places additional emphasis on life-long learning, either for career development or for personal satisfaction, the role of both the Evening and PACE programs will become more important.

The Middle States Report speaks to the growing posture of the faculty on campus. Our teachers are regarded as competent scholars, well versed in their disciplines. The achievements of the faculty continue to be a source of strength for the University. I am pleased to relate below some of the more worthy accomplishments of this group of dedicated persons over the past academic year. It should be noted that much of the attention of the campus during 1973-74 was necessarily directed toward an all-consuming self-study in preparation for the Middle States visit in January. This involved extensive committee and sub-committee assignments for almost all faculty and staff. As a result, the personal and professional accomplishments during this time of added stress and activity are even more noteworthy.

Faculty promotions effective with the start of the 1974-75 academic year include, to full professor: Dr. Robert L. Bradford, political science; Dr. Charles E. Lyle, psychology; Dr. David E. Horlacher, economics; Dr. Elizabeth Wiley, English. To associate professor: Dr. Donald D. Housley, history; Dr. Robert G. Mowry, Spanish. To assistant professor, Dr. Thomas F. Livernois, religion.

Dr. Neil H. Potter, associate professor of chemistry, will be on sabbatical leave for the coming academic year and will teach at Tsai Chung University in Taiwan. David J. Oscarson, assistant professor of business administration, has been granted a leave of absence to begin full-time doctoral studies at Virginia Polytechnic Institute. Carol J. Harrison, assistant professor of mathematical sciences, was also granted a sabbatical leave for the full 1974-75 academic year while Dr. Housley, Dr. Marjorie W. McCune, associate professor of English, and Richard Kamber, assistant professor of philosophy, were granted sabbatical leaves for one term each during the forthcoming year.

The University regrets the departure, for various reasons, of faculty and staff who have been associated with our educational development. Carl A. Haaland, instructor in communications and media, left Susquehanna at the end of the second term to take a position with the Piper Aircraft Corporation in Lock Haven. Gayle D. Confer, instructor in physical education and assistant football coach, also resigned effective March 1 to enter the world of business. Candace R. Herb has resigned her position as assistant professor of English to accept a position at Hood College in Frederick, Maryland. Judy A. Hansen, instructor in music, resigned to pursue her professional career in voice in New York City, while Ann L. Cooper, instructor in physical education, has resigned her position effective July 1. Fredrica H. Stringfellow, instructor in physical education, has tendered her resignation to accept a position with the American Institute of Mental Studies in Vineland, New Jersey.

New full-time faculty members joining the University for the coming year include: Harriet Moran Couch, instructor in music; Connie Nipple Delbaugh and Rose Ann Neff, instructors in physical education; Deane O. Runyon, instructor in communication and director of the Educational Media Center; William R. Frey, instructor in physical education and coach. Dr. Edwin M. Van Dam will be assistant professor of chemistry during Dr. Potter's leave and Robert L. Laud, instructor in business administration during Mr. Oscarson's leave. Robert H. Muirhead joins the coaching staff.

Since my last report, Joel G. Clemmer became reference librarian upon the retirement in mid-year of Mrs. Dorothy Shaulis.

I am pleased to report the progress of certain members of the faculty who completed work on their doctorates. David E. Horlacher, professor of economics, was awarded his doctorate from Pennsylvania State University. W. Murray Hunt, assistant professor of philosophy, received his Ph.D. degree from Indiana University and Thomas F. Livernois, assistant professor of religion, was conferred with the doctor of sacred theology degree by the Lutheran School of Theology at Chicago.

The involvement of faculty and staff in personal and professional advancement continues to grow. The 1974 issue of Susquehanna University Studies, our 38-year-old academic journal, contains five papers written by University faculty members: "A Puppet Looks at His Queen" by Elizabeth Wiley, professor of English; "Georg Büchner's Dantons Tod: Dramatic Structure and Individual Necessity" by Peter B. Waldeck, associate professor of German; "The Creative Solution in Nausea" by Richard Kamber, assistant professor of philosophy; "Floods, Urbanization, and the Tyranny of Small Decisions" by Frank W. Fletcher, professor of geology, and Vicki L. Freeman '74, student research assistant; "The Development of Welfare and Relief in Snyder County, Pennsylvania, During the 1930's: A Case Study of the Modernization Process" by Donald D. Housley, associate professor of history.

Nine members of the music faculty gave on-campus recitals during the past year and three members of the Department's faculty—David A. Boltz, James B. Steffy and Cyril M. Stretansky—conducted secondary school musical groups at district or state gatherings. Mr. Steffy, Department head, was also festival director for the Oaxtepec International Festival of Music in Mexico, served in a similar capacity in Coventry, England, and was a musical adjudicator for the Festival of Nations in Washington, D. C. In December and April, Mr. Stretansky was festival director for the Rome Choral Festival in Italy. Donald W. Beckie, assistant professor of music, was again appointed to the faculty for the Governor's School for the Arts and John P. Magnus, associate professor, received a summer faculty appointment to the American Institute of Musical Studies in Graz, Austria. Also, Dr. James L. Boeringer, University organist, accepted an appointment to the faculty of the Church Music Workshop at Lake George, under the sponsorship of the Journal of Church Music.

Dr. Horlacher served as consultant to the program in Computer Based Population Education at the University of Illinois, to the Government Affairs Institute in Washington, D.C., and to the Airhe Foundation for International Education in Virginia. He was also a discussant for two papers on population and economic development at the annual meeting of the American Sociological Association. At present, Dr. Horlacher is chairman of the Population Panel of the Southeast Asia Development Advisory Group.

In addition to the very creditable achievement of gaining accreditation for its program from the American Chemical Society, the Chemistry Department continues its varied interests in the field, including a prominent role in events commemorating the discovery of oxygen by Joseph Priestley, a former resident of Northumberland, Pennsylvania. Dr. Gynith Giffin, Department head, completed two publications, "A Brief Study of Nuclear Reactor Accidents" and "Some Heavy Metals in the 1972 MS DGC Fulton County Corn Crop."

Dr. Fletcher continues as chairman of the University's Institute For Environmental Studies and testified before several state government committees on land use and solid waste disposal. In addition to his paper in Susquehanna University Studies, a second article, "Paleogeography and Paleoclimates at the Disposition Sites of the Catskill Facies (Late Devonian)" appeared in the September 1974 edition of Geological Society of America Bulletin. Dr. Richard H. Lowright, assistant professor of geology, published two papers during the year in Journal of Sedimentary Petrology: "An Analysis of Factors Controlling Deviations in Hydraulic Equivalence in Some Modern Sands," "Environmental Determination Using Hydraulic Equivalence Studies."

Margaret E. Rogers, assistant professor of mathematical sciences, presented a paper on individualized instruction in linear algebra at a national conference in Washington, D.C., and submitted and had accepted a paper on male orientation of mathematics texts by Mathematics Teacher. Dr. Robert L. Tyler, assistant professor in the same department, has prepared a paper on ring theory for the Canadian Journal of Mathematics.

Dr. Marjorie McCune continues to serve the University as chairman of the editorial board of Susquehanna University Studies and as chairman of the Susquehanna-Bucknell Humanities Colloquium. She also published abstracts on American literary studies in 17th Century News. Dr. Elizabeth Wiley read a paper entitled, "Dickens's Use of London in Oliver Twist" to the Pittsburgh Dickens Fellowship. Ronald L. Dotterer, instructor in English, presented a paper entitled "Illusory Form in Wallace Stevens, The Comedian on the Letter G" at the Northeastern Modern Language Association Conference. Dr. Lawrence A. Abler, professor of English, presented a paper at the Humanities Colloquium entitled "From Angel to Orpheus: Myth-Poetics in Late Rilke." Other Colloquium papers included one on Hamlet by Dr. Nancy A. Cairns, associate professor of French, and Mr. Dotterer.

Members of the Department of Modern Languages were also engaged in serious scholarly activity. Both Dr. Lucia S. Kegler and Dr. Robert G. Mowery, associate professors, are writing or revising language textbooks, while Dr. Cairns and Dr. Peter B. Waldeck, Department head, are working on monographs for future publication.

Larry D. Augustine, associate professor of speech, spent the summer as a manager in a professional theatre in Maryville, Tennessee.

While much of the research involvement in psychology and sociology remains closely tied to the internships and practicums so important to student growth and development, several additional items are worthy of note. Dr. LeRoy H. Pelton, assistant professor of psychology, has completed corrections on his book The Psychology of Non-Violence. Dr. Philip C. Bossart, professor and head of the Psychology Department, has been granted his license by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania as a practicing psychologist. Dr. James R. Misanin, associate professor of psychology, and his associates contributed papers during the past year to Journal of Comparative and Physiological Psychology and Development Psychobiology. William J. Seaton, instructor in sociology, continues his role as an editorial assistant for Popular Music in Society and serves as director of a drug abuse and alcohol study program sponsored by the Mental Health/Mental Retardation unit in a four-county region in Central Pennsylvania. Dr. Charles J. Igoe, associate professor of education, read a paper at the conference of the National Student Volunteer Program held at the University of Chicago entitled "Motivation and Recruitment for Experiential Learning Program," contributed two chapters to a book entitled Experiential Learning, and also serves on the Governor's Council on Aging and is consultant to the National Student Volunteer Program, a branch of ACTION. Dr. Robert A. Bastress, head of the Education Department, completed a manual on "The Design of Instruction" for the University's methods courses.

Dr. Robert L. Bradford, professor of political science, participated in the United States State Department's Scholar-Diplomat Seminar in Washington, D.C., and has been appointed to a new Advisory Committee on South-West Africa created by the Lutheran Council in the U.S.A. Gene R. Urey, assistant professor of political science, reviewed J. Keith Melvill's manuscript entitled "The American Democratic System" and serves by appointment on the Governor's Trial Court Commission in Pennsylvania.

Richard Kamber, assistant professor of philosophy, was awarded a summer grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities on the subject "Quarrel Between Poetry and Philosophy." Dr. Livernois abstracted for the Journal of Ecumenical Studies and Boyd Gibson, assistant professor of religion, reviewed a book for Christian Century, participated in a Jewish-Christian Dialog at Haverford, Pennsylvania, and serves as part-time counselor for Tressler-Lutheran Associates and a new family counseling service set up on the campus during the past year.

In order to assist faculty members to pursue their professional interests, the University again made available a series of summer research grants of up to $1000 each. Awards this year were presented to Dr. Boeringer, Mr. Dotterer, John E. Fries, Dr. Charles E. Lyle and Dr. Frederick D. Ullman.

Grants in progress during the year for special projects included: the second year of a $226,000 grant from the National Science Foundation to fund the work of the University's Institute For Environmental Studies; the second year of a $10,000 grant to Dr. Otto Reimherr, head of the Religion and Philosophy Department, for the development of an Institute for Studies in Parish Ministry; the continuation of a $15,000 grant to Mr. Seaton in sociology for further development of a drug and alcohol abuse study funded by the Governor's Council; grants of $2500 each from the Northumberland and Danville units of Mental Health/Mental Retardation for the development of a certificate program in community mental health in the Evening Program.

DEVELOPMENT / FINANCES

COLLEGE COSTS have risen nationally between 30 and 40 percent over the past four years. While Susquehanna's costs still rank favorably with competing colleges and universities, it is little comfort to the parents of our students who pay $3500 per year for tuition, room and board, and fees. We spend considerable time discussing how this University can maintain its diversified student population during times when double digit inflation rages across the country. A broad financial aid plan has helped, but even the $1 million-plus administered by the Financial Aid Office will need to be supplemented with other sources in future years if Susquehanna is to remain within the reach of the average family. It is conceivable that over the next three years the number of students seeking financial aid will increase from 40 to 50 percent, particularly if real income continues to lose its race with inflation.

Sixty-two percent of the University's budget of over $5 million is derived from tuition and fees. This figure is about average or slightly above that of competing colleges. The one percent of our income generated from endowment ranks Susquehanna well below many colleges. Historically, we have had little endowment—currently under $2 million—and it is income from endowment channeled into the operating budget that helps us expand programs and balance budgets. Indeed, major emphasis must be placed on generating new sources of endowment funds over the next decade. Since well over two-thirds of all endowment comes from bequests and other forms of deferred gifts, the University has initiated an active program to encourage its alumni and friends to help provide for the University in their estate plans. We are pleased to have the help of D. Edgar Hutchison, Class of 1934, serving us part-time and assisting in the area of deferred giving.

One area which gives satisfaction to us all is the manner in which alumni and others have supported the needs of the University in recent years. The pages which follow provide testimony of this support, and I earnestly convey the thanks of Susquehanna for this show of confidence in the University and its future. Between 7 and 9 percent of the University's income comes from gifts and grants, and this figure is somewhat higher than a corresponding figure for many other colleges. Twenty-five percent of our alumni make donations annually, but we must achieve a 35-40 percent rate of participation in future years if we are to keep pace. The annual giving program, the Susquehanna University Fund, exceeded its goal of $150,000 for 1973-74. A more challenging goal for the coming year will provide incentive to us all to improve this record. Overall, the University received $837,344 in gifts and grants during the 1973-74 year, the second best year in history.

I am pleased to report that the operating budget of $5 million for the year ending June 30, 1974 was, once again, in balance. Budgetary pressures have been met with judicious management on the part of the Business Office in eliminating non-essential expenditures without impairment of the educational program. As stated elsewhere, tuition and fees increased by only 5 percent for the next year, even though all costs to the University in general rose by over 9 percent. Based on an anticipated enrollment of 1400 again for 1974-75, operating income of the University should approximate total expenditures.

A major goal of our long-range planning has been to implement a priority program to raise faculty salaries to competitive levels. This was begun last year and will carry forward to 1974-75. Since teaching is Susquehanna's major asset, emphasis on this area was considered essential. It is encouraging to report that the average compensation for the full professor at Susquehanna is now $18,800, about in the middle of the range for similar positions at competing colleges in Pennsylvania. With another major step to be taken in this regard during the coming year, we feel that the Susquehanna professor is now more adequately rewarded for his efforts and our ranking will be enhanced even further. In future years, considerable attention will need to be focused on the lower levels, the ranks of instructor and assistant professor, where S.U. is not now as competitive as we would like it to be.

A highlight of the year just concluded was the dedication of the Roger M. Blough Learning Center on January 19, 1974. This expanded library facility provides Susquehanna with a first-rate library, additional seminar rooms, an educational media center, an environmental studies area, and music listening rooms. The stack capacity of the building was increased to 200,000 volumes and there are 400 individual study stations on the three levels. The building and alterations cost $1,240,000. Everyone who assisted with the project can be proud of the end result!

On that same day the University formally opened the new Susquehanna-Burroughs Computer Center in the Campus Center. The acquisition of a new Burroughs 5500 computer gives Susquehanna a capability to further develop its curriculum in computer science and allied areas and to adequately serve the University in a support role. While about 70 percent of the computer work is now administrative in nature, it is estimated that the majority of our students utilize the computer at one time or another during their stay at Susquehanna. The role of the computer in the educational process cannot be disputed. We are fortunate to have such a fine facility available to students, faculty and staff on our campus.

Funds provided by the National Science Foundation, local business and industry, and the University will make it possible to erect a new research building on campus adjacent to the minidorm, behind the Spitzner Communication Center. The growth of student and student-related research has become an integral part of the academic program. Encouraged by the high caliber of research work performed by students in the sciences in conjunction with the Institute For Environmental Studies, the University has appropriated $35,000 for this facility. Modest in design, the building will be used only for research and will be available to the growing number of students conducting independent research or working with faculty on summer projects. The building should be completed by November 1 of this year.

A major step has been taken by the Board of Directors toward satisfying the final remaining physical need of the University. An appropriation of $10,000 has been used to conduct a feasibility study for a physical education center. The architects, Campbell, Rea, Hayes & Large of Altoona, Pennsylvania, have determined that it is economically and aesthetically feasible to add to the present Alumni Gymnasium. To be presented to the Board in October is a final preliminary plan to erect a new gymnasium as a wing to the north of the present building with seating for at least 1500 and with new locker and auxiliary rooms underneath. To the east of the present building will be a wing housing a swimming pool with six lanes for competition and spectator space for 600. The present gym will be completely renovated and used for physical education, classes and additional locker rooms. It is estimated that the project cost will exceed $2 million, but the Board recognizes the vital importance of this facility. Should Board approval be forthcoming, it is conceivable that construction could begin within a year.

A large portion of our time during the next year will be devoted to interpretation of the Middle States data and formulating a long-range plan for the University. We must further clarify our aims and objectives, build a concise statement of need, and move forward with a capital campaign which will allow the alumni and friends of Susquehanna to share in our vision for the future. Tentative plans call for a major capital campaign beginning in late 1975 and 1976 to kick off the development program for the next decade.

IN CONCLUSION

THERE IS GREAT satisfaction in having completed another academic year on May 25, 1974 by conferring 301 seniors with the baccalaureate degree and welcoming them into the Alumni Association of Susquehanna University. The ceremony was highlighted by a commencement address by Senator Mark O. Hatfield of Oregon, who was awarded the degree of Doctor of Public Administration; and by the baccalaureate sermon of the Rev. J. Stephen Bremer, former S.U. chaplain and now pastor of Luther Memorial Church, Madison, Wisconsin. Pastor Bremer, the Rev. Dale S. Bringman '48 and the Rev. Daniel H. Standstedt of the Lutheran Theological Seminary at Gettysburg were awarded Doctor of Divinity degrees.

The continuing importance of the Church in the activities of the University cannot be overlooked. The development of a covenant document has been the work of many people and has resulted in what is becoming an even more meaningful relationship between the Central Pennsylvania Synod and Susquehanna. We welcome this strength, both as a source of financial stability and, just as importantly, as a source of moral direction.

Several administrative appointments have been made for the new academic year. Wendy McMahan and Susan Payne Stagers join the admissions staff, thus increasing its total to four. Miss McMahan is a graduate of Franklin and Marshall College and served as an editorial assistant with Guidance Associates of Pleasantville, New York, before coming to Susquehanna. Mrs. Stagers is a graduate of Wake Forest College and has taught social studies in both junior and senior high school. Margaret C. Weirick resigned from the admissions staff in mid-year to accept a position at Temple University.

Lourene Maurer becomes the University's new coordinator of residence affairs, replacing Dorothy French Avery. Miss Maurer has a master's degree in education from Bucknell University and has previous experience as a teacher in the Milton, Pennsylvania, schools.

At mid-year the University appointed Peter B. Silvestri as director of public information. He replaces Ronald Berkheimer who moved to a similar position at Juniata College. Silvestri is a graduate of Amherst College, earned his master's at Trinity College, and most recently was a bureau chief for The Hartford Times of Connecticut.

James M. Rising, director of physical plant, resigned in mid-year and was replaced by his former assistant, Jon R. Haviland. William R. Aikey of Milton, Pennsylvania, assumed the position of assistant director.

The Board of Directors elected Harry W. Butts Jr. '48, Philadelphia regional manager for the Burroughs Corporation, and John A. Carpenter, a Sunbury attorney, to five-year terms on the Board. In addition, the Alumni Association elected Samuel D. Ross '54, vice president for administrative services of Pennsylvania Blue Shield and a resident of Carlisle, as an alumni representative to the Board. Donald H. Foelsch '53, a Williamsport chemist, was elected as synodical representative to the Board as was the Rev. David N. Finney, pastor of the Trinity Lutheran Church in Johnstown, who thereby begins a second five-year term.

Mrs. Kimball D. Miller completed her five-year appointment to the Board as a synod representative and, for personal reasons, chose not to be renominated.

The growth and development of the University are the result of the work of many—faculty, staff, Board members, alumni and friends. I have attempted to convey to the reader in my last several reports that the structure of higher education is changing and that Susquehanna must change to meet the new demands of its students and society. Preparing students for life in the latter part of the twentieth century will require new methodologies and an added emphasis on societal concerns. The role of the church-related college becomes increasingly important in reinforcing and reaffirming the moral fiber which, temporarily, has been emasculated and abused. Today's young people have a social conscience, and this speaks well for the quality of future leadership coming from the nation's campuses. It is the liberal arts education which serves as a legitimate base for the democratic system. An understanding of the thought processes, an ability to think analytically, and a respect for reason must continue to form the base for education. Susquehanna will continue to respect this view and, as stated earlier, give it broader perspective through a variety of new educational opportunities. Students will be challenged to undertake real life experiences and to apply their base of knowledge to societal problems.

The introduction of new programs and new methodologies will, in some respects, change the face of the University. The basic purpose of a Susquehanna education, however, is the education of the total individual. This worthy goal has not changed over the years, nor will it change in the future.

ONCE AGAIN the University would like to use this means of expressing its appreciation to all those who supported its various programs during the past fiscal year. The period covered by this report is July 1, 1973 through June 30, 1974. Only contributions received during the year are included here. Pledges to the various University programs are not included, but payments made on such pledges are acknowledged. One asterisk denotes a gift of $100 or more; two asterisks, $500 or more. A dagger after the name indicates that a matching gift was received from the donor's employer. A separate listing of University Associates, those giving $100 or more to annual giving—The Susquehanna University Fund—is included at the beginning of the donor's section. The following list is intended to be comprehensive of all donors to the University but, should there be omissions, we ask that they be brought to the attention of the University.

BEQUESTS TO THE UNIVERSITY

THE MEANING of bequests to Susquehanna University cannot be overemphasized. Throughout the years men and women of varied backgrounds and means have reaffirmed their faith in the future of the University by providing substance to the educational program through the use of the will. Over the years the University has received bequests ranging from $100 to $500,000, and each has played a significant role in the advancement of the University.

During the fiscal year July 1, 1973 through June 30, 1974 additional bequests totaling more than $125,000 have been received. The University wishes to recognize these benefactors, since the funds they have provided will serve to strengthen the long-range educational programs of Susquehanna.

The Estate of Chalmers E. Frontz, a member of the Class of 1896 and a resident of Selinsgrove, provided that 2 percent of his residuary estate should be given to Susquehanna University for general endowment purposes.

The Estate of Miller Gerhardt, a member of the Class of 1930, provided that one-half of his total estate after expenses should be left to Susquehanna University to become a part of the University's fund for general use.

The Estate of J. Edward Lenker, a resident of Sunbury, Pa. and former member of the Susquehanna University Board of Directors, directed that a substantial portion of his estate be given to the University to establish the Ruth Lenker Hunter Reading Room in the Roger M. Blough Learning Center in memory of his daughter.

The Estate of W. Ralph Wagenseiler, a member of the Class of 1900, left a portion of his estate unrestricted to be used as deemed appropriate by the Board of Directors of Susquehanna University.

MATCHING CONTRIBUTORS

THE UNIVERSITY wishes to recognize these companies' matching gifts of employees to Susquehanna University for the period July 1, 1973 through June 30, 1974. Corporate Matching Gift Programs provide a vital source of funds for higher education and serve to double the value of the employee's donation. Please check to see if your employer is one of more than 450 with Matching Gift Programs.

Concerns About Admissions

A SUSQUEHANNA ALUMNUS INTERVIEW WITH PAUL W. BEARDSLEE, DIRECTOR OF ADMISSIONS

What is the current status of admissions at Susquehanna?

Frankly, I would describe our feelings about Susquehanna's admissions picture and its future as one of guarded optimism. There are many plus factors at the University—its faculty, its students, its campus, and its programs. Also, when we review our experience of this past year we have to take heart. As is now common knowledge in most circles on campus, we not only acquired our desired enrollment for 1974, but we actually surpassed our goal by nearly 30 students. In a time when so many private colleges are experiencing enrollment declines, we have to feel encouraged that Susquehanna was not in that boat.

However, we do not feel all that comfortable that we can sit back and watch future classes fill. As is also common knowledge, we "landed" our class from a declining pool of applicants. This year's total was some 140 applications fewer than last year and last year's total represented a decline from the previous year. While it was most gratifying that our yield—the number who enrolled from those admitted—made a turnabout, we are apprehensive about the future. It seems clear that our prime goal must be one of reversing this skidding application trend.

Last year, I indicated that improving our yield would be our goal for 1974. That being accomplished is heartening and speaks to my optimism. We remain "guarded" or "cautious" simply because a diminishing pool of applicants might very well cause student quality to suffer in the future.

What are the prospects for increasing the number of applicants?

This is a difficult question to answer with any high degree of certainty. As I indicated earlier, many colleges are experiencing enrollment problems and almost all are witnessing declining volumes of applications. This is certainly the case among our competitors. Frankly, I do not foresee any early change in this latter trend nationally. After all, there are fewer college-bound students to begin with and each of these will submit fewer applications than once was the case. Although I will not elaborate at this point, societal shifts have changed our situation from a "seller's" market to a "buyer's." Consequently, the axioms, parameters, guidelines of the '60s are no longer appropriate tools. In sum, the "selective" syndrome of a decade ago has been replaced by a keen competition for students.

This might suggest that we have little hope for increasing our number of applicants. Such, however, is not necessarily true, for several steps have been and will be taken to offset this year's experience. We have added another staff member, permitting us to visit at least 25 percent more schools and provide more personal contact. It will be our hope that although there are fewer applicants sending fewer applications, we will be able to contact more of those students and, in return, stand a better chance of being one of the colleges to which they make application.

In short, our mission will be increased personal contact in as many areas as possible. We want to utilize our constituency—students, faculty, administration, alumni, friends—more fully than ever before. Efforts are underway to increase the options and opportunities for campus visits, both by individuals and groups. Already, a program is being established to bring youth groups, church groups, etcetera, to the campus. The thrust of this program will be an introduction to college in general. Admissions (recruiting) involvement will be indirect only and will probably focus on providing student tour guides/aides, and so forth.

What do you hope will be accomplished through such ventures?

With competition for students increasing, and the pool declining, we must make ourselves more visible. Increasing school visits and "on the road" contact we hope will increase the awareness of Susquehanna. Thus, we would hope the amount of interest in Susquehanna would increase. If this can then be followed by increasing the volume of campus visiting, we think positive results will be forthcoming.

It has been my personal experience and Susquehanna's experience that our "rate of return" is much better from those who visit. Certainly, therefore, increasing the options and opportunities for visiting makes sense simply because the Susquehanna campus and its constituents have something to sell. Indeed, it is the campus, its faculty, and its students that do the selling. I am convinced that more awareness of and more exposure to the University will enhance our status in the long haul. The change will not be dramatic in a single year, however.

What attracts students to a particular college?

Certainly there is no single factor. We have found, however, that while guidance counselors and parents are still involved, it is the student—in many cases a more sophisticated student, one more sure of himself or herself—who makes the choice. In questioning our incoming classes, several factors stand out. First: a student is drawn to the University by a program we offer in which he is interested; the high regard held for our music and business programs will serve as an illustration. Second: the overall academic reputation of the college is important, as is proximity to home. Most of our students come from within a 200-mile radius of Selinsgrove. Some will be attracted by our rural campus, some by various cocurricular programs. The importance of facilities cannot be ignored either. Most students have experienced excellent secondary school facilities and expect the same here. Fortunately, Susquehanna has good facilities and an accommodating campus. The only exceptions would be the need for a more adequate physical education facility and the refurbishing of our two oldest dorms. On the drawing board now, of course, is the addition to Alumni Gym.

We should not ignore our current students in the process.

As suggested earlier, they are our best salesmen. If they have a good experience here, they tell their friends. Peer influence does carry positive impact.

Is there one overriding factor of importance?

It appears to us that the basic factor in choosing a college is the quality of the academic program offered. We must remember that Susquehanna is one of several hundred small, private colleges in the East having similar size and characteristics. What makes us attractive is a combination of the factors just cited, but most importantly, our academic program. We are definitely doing some things that attract students, including an increasing number of transfers each year. For example, our quality programs in music, business, and the sciences have been consistent drawing cards to Susquehanna over the years. In the humanities and social sciences, we now offer internships and other forms of off-campus learning experiences which have real appeal to students. The chance to study at the United Nations, the Junior Year Abroad, the urban semesters in Harrisburg or Baltimore, a growing Environmental Studies program, are all features attractive to students. Susquehanna is moving in the front ranks in many of these areas. My hope, of course, is that we will be able to do a more thorough job of communicating what we have available to an even larger audience as we go along.

What type of student is Susquehanna looking for?

I really dislike this kind of question, for I am not quite certain that there is a specific kind of student we should seek. After all, a broad cross-section amongst our students adds considerable breadth to Susquehanna's definition of the Liberal Arts. As diversification increases, so does the potential for a diversified educational experience increase. Nevertheless, there are characteristics that would fairly accurately describe our average student.

For the most part, and as I mentioned earlier, most of our students are from the East (88 percent of our current freshman class comes from Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and New York). Roughly 75 percent ranked in the upper two-fifths of their secondary school classes, and their SAT scores averaged approximately 500 on the Verbal section and 540 on the Math section. This has been our recent experience, although we are now beginning to see the same trends that are occurring nationally on standardized exams, namely a decline.

I would hasten to add that in reviewing a candidate, all factors are taken into consideration and, on occasion, some will be more important for one student than they will be for others. Such cases frequently develop in specialty areas. By and large the student's record of achievement over his or her high school years is the most important factor. The last two years are even more vital, for growth here usually indicates positive motivation and desire. Second in importance would be a combination of the student's cocurricular/community activity record and his school's overall assessment of his/her achievements and contributions. Standardized test results, in my opinion, fall somewhere behind these other, more personal factors. There is absolutely no question in my mind that promise as a student and promise as a person involve much more than scores.

Since Susquehanna is a small school located in a rural setting, I view this approach as vital to our existence. To remain viable and meaningful, Susquehanna needs students who are people, not numbers that are impressive on print-outs. We are alive not only because our students are here to benefit from a solid college education, but also to contribute to that experience and that campus along the way. While promise for academic success might be present, we consider the human element essential for our kind of institution.

Should only those students who meet the criteria just cited bother to apply for admission?

As I mentioned before, our student body hopefully possesses many characteristics. In a real sense, we are not encouraging the well-rounded student, but rather the "lopsided" one, if you'll allow such a description. With the proper melding, we end up with a well-rounded student body.

I would hope that such an answer would not be considered critically for what I am really saying is that we hate to discourage any sincere student from inquiring about admission to the University. After all, the circumstances of each individual differ and career and educational goals vary greatly. We certainly urge each student to talk with his guidance counselor, who can assist in matching student and institution. A large part of our own school visiting is to make certain that counselors know what attributes are important when applicants are reviewed.

We also strongly urge students to visit us, to "try us on." While interviews are not required, the exchange of information that occurs is extremely helpful to the student in determining whether Susquehanna is the kind of place in which he will want to spend four rather vital and expensive years of his life. Whether a student is at the serious stage of college inquiry or is just a casual shopper, we strongly recommend the campus visit. We are here to help—not to hinder—and quite frankly, if a student's best interests are not our first interests, we shouldn't be here. There is but one step that I urge everyone to take: please make appointments in advance!

Is preference given to children of alumni?

An easy answer here would be to simply say yes. However, if that were all that we said, we would contradict all that we said earlier. In truth, we will employ the same parameters cited—we want to serve the student's best interests in all cases. "Is Susquehanna the right college for your son or daughter? Can he or she make the grade here, or would we really do a greater disservice by granting admission?" These questions are raised in all cases. Anything less would be insulting to all involved.

Obviously, a blanket admission policy for children of alumni would make for fewer public relations problems, at least at the outset. I would suspect, however, that in the long haul we would create more problems than we would solve, and some wounds might never heal. I have seen far too many instances where such a blanket policy or a "loosening of the parameters" resulted in a considerable waste of time and money. In many cases, aspirations, motivations, even personalities were seriously eroded or severely damaged.

The record, however, involving the admission of alumni children to Susquehanna University is impressive. Of the 20 who applied for admission this fall, 19 were admitted, and 17 enrolled. I definitely feel we should encourage alumni children to visit with us to discuss their future plans. In fact, I would even go so far as to solicit their inquiry. We are earmarking our Saturday morning group sessions on Homecoming and Alumni Weekends for just that purpose. Whether the inquiry is about higher education in general or Susquehanna in particular, we are here to serve and to help in choosing the right school. Naturally, we will hope that many will want to choose their parents' alma mater in the process.

How can alumni help the admissions office?

More and more colleges are actively involving their alumni in the admissions process. In our recent past, we have utilized the services of eight or ten of our alumni in covering college night programs and contacting students in the areas who have made application to the University. All alumni can assist by encouraging students to consider Susquehanna or they can forward names and we will follow up.

While it is doubtful that a highly sophisticated alumni-admissions program such as exists at some Ivy League schools will develop in the near future, we are planning to explore—and hopefully, implement—means of expanding our present alumni-admissions program. Jim Skinner will be handling this segment of our operation and we hope that time for this exploration can be set aside after our heavy travel season ends. Initially, I would suspect that the inclusion of more contact persons will be our prime concern.

Has the rising cost of a college education hurt the admissions program at Susquehanna?

There is no question that the national economic picture has had a negative impact on higher education, most especially upon the private institutions. As long as our society experiences this unstable economy, we will be facing concerning times.

While Susquehanna's costs are moderate, we are still talking about a yearly expenditure approaching $4000. My real fear is that many private colleges are going to price themselves beyond the capacity of the middle income family. The tragedy of this is obvious, for it is this segment of society that makes up the bulk of our constituency. As I mentioned earlier, we hope to attract a broad socio-economic student body, which becomes increasingly difficult with spiraling costs.

Assistant directors of admissions are Jim Skinner '64, Susan Stagers and, below, Wendy McMahan. The Admissions House is now located at 512 University Avenue.

On the positive side, Federal and state financial aid programs are being liberalized, which suggests increasing recognition that the middle income family is bearing the brunt. Susquehanna makes every effort to provide appropriate adjustments as costs increase but our sources are not unlimited.

The Admissions Office works closely with the director of financial aid to assure that adequate aid packages are constructed to accommodate those students who enter the University with financial need. The aid decision is always made after the admission decision has been rendered. To date, we have been successful in providing adequate aid for all those having a need and Federal and state programs have been increasingly helpful. You can rest assured that we will continue in this vein as long as possible. Here again, I urge inquiries and visits to the campus to discuss the various financial aid opportunities available at Susquehanna. Ed McCormick, our director of financial aid, has all the information at his disposal and spends many hours reviewing files and assisting students in seeking out viable aid sources.

As is the case at most colleges, Susquehanna employs the services of the College Scholarship Service in Princeton, New Jersey. Through the use of the Parents' Confidential Statement, provided and evaluated by this service, a student's need to attend the University is determined. While this form is standardized and is certainly not a perfect solution, the formula it employs does attempt to include varying family circumstances in its consideration. To date, we have found this approach to be the most equitable to all.

Do you have any additional comments on your "guarded optimism"?

In this day of inflation, rising costs, and so on, many students and parents are reluctant to commit themselves to a four-year college education. The present uncertainty of employment opportunities and the growing feeling that college is not worth the effort do nothing to counter the reluctance. Certainly, not every high school graduate should go to college and we definitely endorse the "stopping out" idea for some others. Getting a better "handle" on one's sense of direction before going on to college often brings to us a more serious and mature student.

But the worth of a college education must be predicted on future plans and the career goals of each individual. I am absolutely certain that "college" will continue to hold a high place in our society, most especially if new programs develop that speak to changing societal trends and demands.

My confidence that Susquehanna will remain among those in that high place is unshakable. The University offers a solid and broad educational program based upon a sound liberal education philosophy. There is enthusiasm for what we are and the review and introduction of new programs is continuous. I believe we possess the flexibility and adaptability to accommodate innovation and new ideas. We are contemporary and worth the expense. When we consider the complexities of today's society, I not only feel that a college education is needed, but the kind of broad liberal education we provide has become more essential now than ever before.

As we embark upon expanding our horizons and our contacts and as we improve upon our communications and sense of community, I think we will attract our share of qualified students. I do not anticipate dramatic changes overnight, but we have the tools to start the game. I might add that no helping hand will be refused.

by PETE SILVESTRI

ALTHOUGH SUSQUEHANNA'S 1973-74 basketball record of 13-12 did not measure up to pre-season hopes, third-year coach Barry Keadle did achieve the most successful Crusader basketball campaign since the 20-4 slate of 1962-63. It was Keadle's first winning season at Susquehanna, and only the second in 11 years for the Crusaders. With only one starter gone at graduation and eight lettermen returning, including 6-6 junior forward Dave Long of Doylestown, Pa., who Keadle considers an All-American candidate, the Crusaders are again hoping for a fine season in 1974-75.

Long made the switch from center to forward early last season, and responded by leading the team in scoring and rebounding as a sophomore with averages of 17.4 points and 8.3 rebounds per game. With figures slightly higher than that in league competition, Long was selected to the first team of the Middle Atlantic Conference Northern College Division All-Star squad. Keadle says Long "has speed and quickness and is the best shooter (55 percent last year) for a big man that I've ever coached." The only characteristic Long is lacking, according to Keadle, is sufficient aggressiveness, and he's gaining in that department.

Another outstanding returnee is 6-1 senior Ralph Wolckenhauer of River Vale, N.J., a leaper who played at both guard and forward last year but will be used primarily in the backcourt next season. He was the Crusaders top assistant man last winter, second leading rebounder with 7.3 per game, third high scorer with 11.5 points per game, and exhibits the kind of hustle and desire that keeps Keadle muttering "I wish I had four more like him." Joining Long in the frontcourt will probably be 6-9 sophomore Bob Hertzog of Atlas, Pa., at center and 6'3" junior Tom McCarty of Roslyn, Pa., at forward. Dave Atkinson of Carbondale, Pa., a 6-4 forward who saw more action than any other freshman on the squad last season, is a dependable reserve and possible starter. Sophomore center Bob Buckfelder of Rockville Centre, N.Y., who at 6-4 has less height but more strength than Hertzog, is also a contender for a starting job, although he did not play enough to earn a letter last year. Of this group, McCarty and Atkinson made the biggest contributions last year. McCarty played in every game but one and had 4.6 rebounds and 7.1 points per game. Atkinson averaged 4.8 rebounds and 4.9 points in four less games, is excellent on defense. With plenty of size and talent available, Keadle expects to be strongest in the front line. An incoming freshman, 6-7 forward Bruce Bishop of Cranston, N.J., will also be given an opportunity to earn some playing time.

Paired with Wolckenhauer at guard will be 6-0 senior Joe Prekopa of McAdoo, Pa., a starter last year who didn't take many shots but earned 49 percent for 8.8 points per game. The one starter who graduated is two-time All ECAC guard Jim Baglin, who averaged 13.8 points per game last winter though bothered by a back injury. His outside shooting, ball-handling and playmaking abilities will be hard to replace. Should Wolckenhauer and Prekopa fail to pick up the slack, a pair of highly regarded 6-0 freshmen, Kreg Ultican of Rootstown, Ohio, and Archie Stank of Shamokin, Pa., are available to help out at guard.

Other returning lettermen are Steve Deck, 6-3 junior forward from Scotch Plains, N.J., and Mike Timmons, 6'1" junior guard from Chatham, N.J. Also back with some experience under their belts are Dave Spence, 5-10 junior guard from Wheaton, Md., and John Neuhauser, 6-3 junior forward from Roslyn, Pa.

If next season follows last year's pattern, it could be a fine line that marks the difference between a good record and a mediocre one. Last season the Crusaders were involved in seven games that were decided by the one or two points, and they lost five of them. Susquehanna's main strength should be shooting, as it was last year when the team hit 49 percent from the floor for the season. The Crusaders should hold their own under the boards. Last year ball-handling mistakes proved costly, as the opposition got more shots at the basket than did the Crusaders, and Susquehanna could have trouble in that department again next season. But if the guards can avoid turnovers, the Crusaders could enjoy their best basketball campaign in 12 years.

Deaths

Ray S. Bolig '05, Millersburg, Pa.

Dr. Emerson L. Derr '39, Selinsgrove, Pa., July 10, 1974. He earned the M.A. from Bucknell and Ed.D. from Penn State University, both in history. Dr. Derr retired in 1970 after 45 years of teaching mostly at Shikellamy Sr. H.S., Sunbury. He also taught part-time at Susquehanna for a time. He was a member of Trinity Lutheran Church, Hughesville, and several professional organizations. Among his survivors is a daughter, Jean Derr Powell '49 (Mrs. Clifford M.).

Maude Kempfer Thomas x (Mrs. Hurley R.), Beaver Springs, Pa., July 12, 1974. Prior to her retirement in 1965 she was a member of the staff at the Selinsgrove State School and Hospital. She was a member of Christ United Church of Christ.

Mary Da Boll Mease, Selinsgrove, Pa., July 14, 1974, a former University library and registrar's office employee, she was the wife of William L. Mease '40. She was a member of St. Paul's United Church of Christ.

Cordilla Moyer Moyer x'17, Selinsgrove, Pa., July 15, 1974. She was the widow of Perry F. Moyer '16. She was a member of Sharon Lutheran Church and the Rev. Celo V. Leitzel '45 officiated at her funeral service. Among her survivors is a sister, Marion Moyer Potteiger '17, widow of Dr. Robert J. Potteiger x'18.

Clyde D. Sechler '41, Cranbury, N.J., July 21, 1974. A onetime Selinsgrove music teacher, Clyde and his wife, the former Louise McWilliams '43, were identified with the Fred Waring organization for many years. They both sang with the famous Pennsylvanians and Clyde was the group's composer-arranger. He also appeared frequently on the Ed Sullivan TV show and was well known as the creator of a number of successful commercials. In 1966, on the occasion of his 25th anniversary reunion, the talented family (Clyde, Louise and their two children, Jody and Craig) presented two performances of a rollicking variety show at Susquehanna. He was a Presbyterian elder and choir director.

Nostalgia? This photo appears to have been taken about 65 years ago, perhaps at the dedication of the sundial built in front of Seibert Hall. The attractive landmark no longer exists and the empty platform was removed in 1959.

Vol. 44

No. 2

ON OUR COVER: Susquehanna coed Janice Kimmerer helps a Selinsgrove Middle School student with his lessons in a new volunteer program. The SU students, prior to their student teaching next year, serve as aides to regular teachers in the local school—to the apparent satisfaction of students, teachers, and school administrators as well. Our picture story is on pages 6 and 7.

And there is news about the naming of Susquehanna's Chapel Auditorium, another article by Ted Hutchison '34, a report from the Class of 1974, all about the current inter-collegiate athletic seasons, and your genial SU weatherman, too. So read what's happening on campus, and read about your old friends—and check that item about Jobs For Alumni, page 26, too.

The Weber Chapel Auditorium

PRESIDENT and Mrs. Gustave W. Weber didn't know what was in store for them when they sat down to luncheon with about 65 Alumni Workshop participants in the Campus Center on January 18. But Joseph Lincoln Ray of the Board of Directors changed that when he announced that the Board had voted to name the Center's private dining rooms in honor of Winifred Shearer Weber, the President's wife, and to name the Chapel Auditorium for Gustave Weber himself. Both honors are in recognition and appreciation for 16 years (on February 1) of dedicated and fruitful leadership from the popular couple. Bronze plaques are to be placed in May.

Weber Chapel Auditorium, with its 1500 seats and unusual multipurpose revolving stage, was completed and dedicated on November 6, 1966 by the late Dr. Franklin Clark Fry, president of the Lutheran Church in America, and actor-composer Efrem Zimbalist Jr. An area landmark, it is regularly filled to capacity for a variety of religious and cultural events.

Volunteers Prep For Teaching

A NEW VOLUNTEER internship program at Susquehanna University allows prospective teachers to spend several hours per week during their junior year serving as para-professionals with teachers in the new Selinsgrove Area Middle School. The internship program is intended as preparatory to the education majors' 10 weeks of full-time student teaching, required for certification, which is done during the senior year.

Dr. Charles J. Igoe, associate professor of education and coordinator of volunteer services at Susquehanna, is director of the internship program, assisted this year by Susan Grubb, a senior English major from Selinsgrove, who serves as coordinator of the interns.

The student interns benefit in two major ways from their work in the middle school, according to Dr. Igoe and Miss Grubb. The experience and skills gained will give them an extra "selling point" when they graduate and seek a job in an ever-tightening job market, and the experience can help the undecided determine whether or not they wish to enter the teaching profession. The middle school staff also benefits. Principal Donald Morgan says he is "extremely pleased" with the way the program is working out. The teachers "have spoken most favorably" about their student assistants, Morgan says. The middle school, in fact, could make use of more interns than the University has been able to provide.

The interns perform a variety of functions. They serve as "resource persons," helping teachers find information for lessons and plan activities; work tutoring individual students who need help in a particular subject area; and assist with various projects such as cataloging and filing teaching materials. The innovative, open classroom and team-teaching approach of the middle school also provides an interesting and valuable experience for the University students.

The physical layout of the $4.8 million building opened in September is unusual. The three grades, 6, 7 and 8, are each housed in what the middle school staff calls a "pod," as in "peas in a pod." Each pod is a large, open area containing about 200 students who are divided into several smaller class sections arranged in separate areas, but not set off by walls. The sensation of being in a large area with so many students is distracting to the visitor, but the school staff maintains that teachers and students get used to the arrangement and "tune out" the noise and sight of other class groups. A main advantage of the arrangement, according to the middle school staff, is "flexibility." The physical space can be put to a variety of uses without walls getting in the way.

There are some "private" classrooms available for purposes such as watching a film, but even these are not totally enclosed with openings instead of doors. The lack of doors even extends to the student bathrooms. A maze effect provides visual privacy, but makes supervision easier by allowing "noise and smoke" to carry outside.

Performing a variety of duties at the Selinsgrove Middle School are, clockwise, Eleanor Kusche '75 of Northport, N.Y., Kathleen Kilgallen '76 of Westwood, N.J., Brenda Zboray '76 of Northumberland, Pa., Diana Smuda '76 of West Orange, N.J., and Janice Kimmerer '75 of Berkeley Heights, N.J.

The Class of 1974 Reports

SUSQUEHANNA ALUMNUS is pleased to present this annual report from the most recent graduating class—the Class of 1974, 312 strong. Up to preparation time, replies to the Alumni Office query totaled 211, which is only slightly more than two-thirds, but about the same as the percentage over the past few years. The breakdown of residences and occupations does not vary greatly either. The majority live in the Middle Atlantic States—118 in Pennsylvania, 27 in New Jersey, and 18 in New York—with 18 other states and three foreign countries also represented. As for their occupations: 77 are in business, banking or insurance; 43 are doing graduate work; 35 are teaching; 18 are in accounting; 12 are in service occupations; at least 7 are in computer programming and related work; 5 are in government service; 4 in the armed services. Interestingly, 3 are radio announcers and only 2 appear to be full-time homemakers. Here they are, the Class of 1974 . . .

Maria Esther Asin: Graduate study at Bucknell, head resident of Casa Española and lecturer in Spanish at Susquehanna.

William D. Atkinson: Branch management trainee, Girard Bank, Philadelphia.

Edwin V. Babbitt III: Announcer and member of the news staff, WVLC, Orleans, Mass.

Jane L. Bailey: Secretary, Fort Augusta Construction Co., Sunbury.

Randall W. Bailey: Accountant, internal auditing department of Kinney Shoes, Camp Hill, Pa.

Janet Bauer Upperco: Administrative associate, accounting department, Princeton University Plasma Physics Laboratory, Princeton, N.J.

Daniel M. Baxter: Sales, Ahmed Volkswagen, Poughkeepsie, N.Y.

Barbara Ann Benion: Teaching 7th and 8th grade English, Warrior Run Middle School, Turbotville, Pa.

Jill E. Berninger: Graduate study in wild life biology at North Carolina State University.

Charles J. Blauvelt III: Music teacher, Columbia, Pa.

Jane Bogenrief Campbell: Temporarily a lifeguard and swim coach.

Winifred L. Bookout: 8th grade social studies teacher, Baltimore County, Towson, Md.

Raymond F. Bower: Data Systems Department, Southern New England Telephone, New Haven, Conn.

Martha E. Brandwene: File clerk and bookkeeper, Alan C. Sugarman Esq., Asbury Park, N.J.

Petite M. K. Brogan: Management trainee, East Bay Telephone Employees Federal Credit Union, Oakland, Calif.

Karen E. Brosius: Reference assistant, handling interlibrary loans, Blough Learning Center at Susquehanna.

THE WEATHER FROM SUSQUEHANNA

EACH MORNING Selinsgrove radio station WSEW's listeners hear the voice of Susquehanna's Environmental Studies director Dr. Frank Fletcher delivering the "most local" weather report available in the area.

However, Fletcher chuckles at those who think he possesses a vast array of special, highly sophisticated equipment. All forecasters, he explains, use the same analysis and prognosis maps transmitted via Western Union from the National Weather Service in Washington, D.C. What makes Fletcher's forecast unique in the Selinsgrove area is that it is the only one that interprets the national data solely and specifically in terms of what it means for this locality. Most weather reports carried by newspapers, radio and television are based on a much larger area, Fletcher notes, and thus are less accurate in terms of a specific spot such as Selinsgrove.

The S.U. weather station was instituted in mid-1972 and is supported through a grant from the National Science Foundation. At the outset the "station" was merely an instrument shelter on the roof of the Science Hall that recorded temperature, humidity and rainfall. Fletcher's first radio weather reports told only what the weather had been. "Not very interesting," he admits. During the summer of 1973 the equipment for receiving weather map transmissions from Washington went into operation, and the forecasting began.

By then the weather station had been moved into a building at the Penn Valley Airport in Selinsgrove, but Fletcher is currently making another move. In order to allow easier access by students, the weather station is being moved into the new environmental studies laboratory building nearing completion on campus next to the minidorm. This will permit intensification of the University's course work in meteorology.

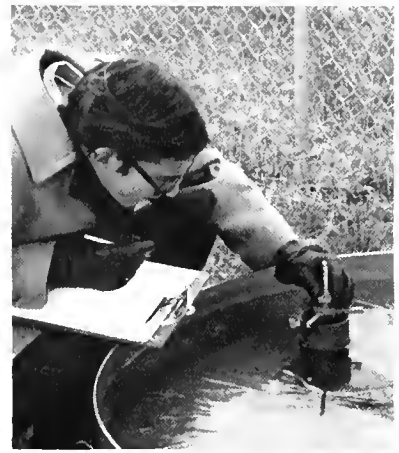

Fletcher's weather reports are not only "local," but are also the most "in-depth" in the region. The weather center publishes a monthly newsletter, called Weather Vane, which gives detailed information on temperature, degree days and precipitation for the past month, and anticipated average temperature, degree days and precipitation for the upcoming month. This information is used by farmers, building contractors, and people trying to estimate their heating bills.

In addition to receiving national weather information from Washington, the Susquehanna weather station also provides detailed information on local conditions to the National Weather Service. The local data becomes part of the national service's long-term records on which its extended forecasts are based.

Fletcher says that the Selinsgrove area is a "meteorologist's nightmare" because it lies right on the dividing line between "ocean weather and mountain weather."

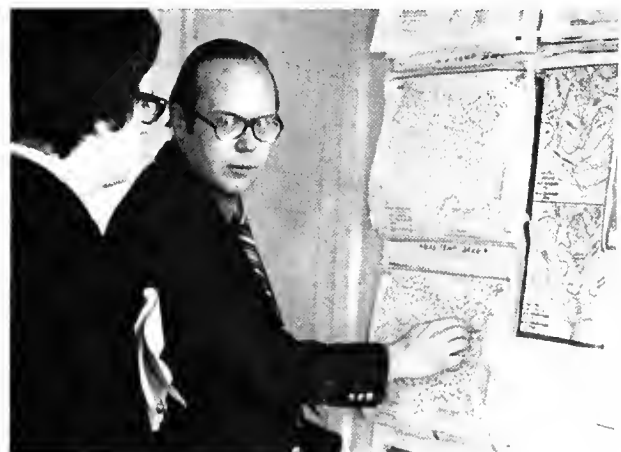

Environmental Institute technical aide Steve Herrold '69 spends a great deal of time monitoring dials and gauges, while also teaching part-time in the Physics Department. Below, Dr. Fletcher shows public information director Peter Silvestri some of the data transmitted to Susquehanna's Community Weather Facility at the Penn Valley Airport.

He says that his 12-hour forecasts have a 90 percent chance of being correct if good weather is forecast, and a 50 percent chance if bad weather is forecast. A 24-hour forecast is correct half the time if it's for good weather, somewhat less if for bad weather.

Good weather is easier to predict, says Fletcher, because high pressure systems are broad and stable. Predicting a storm is difficult, he says, because of rapid changes in its speed and direction. Also, he notes, a two-degree difference in temperature makes the difference between one inch of rain and ten inches of snow.

Despite these odds, Frank Fletcher's is probably S.U.'s most-heard voice. Listeners include the Bucknell University astronomer, who tunes in in the morning to listen if he will have clear skies for his class at night.

The greatest and, in fact, the only impulse to human progress is the spark of altruism in the individual human being.

—HERBERT C. HOOVER

Toward Permanence in Higher Education

by D. EDGAR HUTCHISON

This is the second in a series of articles about the University's deferred giving program. Susquehanna encourages alumni and friends to consider the possibility of providing for the University in their wills or establishing annuities or trusts in favor of the college. D. Edgar Hutchison '34 serves as associate in development for deferred giving. These comments are provided for information only and are not to be construed as legal advice. The purpose is to have alumni and friends think about estate planning and the possibility of a deferred gift to Susquehanna. For further information, without any obligation, please contact Mr. Hutchison at home or at the Development Office at Susquehanna. Inquiries will be treated with strict confidence.

THE NEED to sustain our various institutions has never been more evident. From its inception in 1858, Susquehanna University has attempted to inculcate in its students a true respect for learning as well as an understanding of the traditions and beliefs of the Christian faith. The University recognizes the need to ensure permanency by further solidifying those many strengths which have made the Susquehanna experience a most relevant one for over 7000 living alumni in all walks of life.

To help guarantee a meaningful education for future generations of students, Susquehanna looks to its alumni and friends to provide that spark of altruism needed to perpetuate the University and its program. Those who can must be encouraged to search for ways to assist in strengthening the future of Susquehanna!

Former President Herbert Hoover spoke the words quoted above almost three decades ago, and he spoke both as an observer and as a participant. He will be remembered as a leading spokesman for American individualism. It was not surprising, therefore, that he saw the spark of altruism coming not from society as a whole but from the individual human being. The Susquehanna University Deferred Giving Program provides a vehicle through which you may lend a degree of permanency to a most venerable institution.

THE IMPORTANCE OF BEQUESTS

The strength of Susquehanna University has been sustained over many years by the generosity of alumni and friends. Historically, alumni have helped to underwrite the cost of education for students who, if required to pay the full cost of their undergraduate education, would have found this cost prohibitive. As each succeeding class has graduated and taken its place in society, the University has encouraged their support of Susquehanna to assure the same opportunity for future generations of students.

Support for Susquehanna takes many shapes and forms. Few individuals have the opportunity to give substantial sums during their lifetime, but almost everyone can eventually do something equally important and equally permanent by guaranteeing quality education for future generations.

It is estimated that 90 percent of a college's endowment funds come from bequests. Endowment is crucial in providing income with which to generate new and expanded educational programs and for scholarship aid and faculty salaries. Since 1965, Susquehanna has received over $1,000,000 in bequests. These testamentary gifts have provided strength and vitality for the institution as well as permanent recognition for the donors. Bequests have been used to establish scholarship funds, to memorialize buildings and particular rooms within buildings, to perpetuate one's annual gift and to establish special memorial book funds and departmental endowments.

The University has been the recipient of bequests ranging from $100 to $500,000, and each has played a major role in the advancement of the institution. As indicated, the purpose of such gifts have varied but each, regardless of size, played a large role in assuring that the Susquehanna type of education would be available for many years to come.

SEEK YOUR LAWYER'S ADVICE

It is important that every person, regardless of his means, have a will, and the writing of this technical document should always be entrusted to an attorney. The purposes to be achieved by a will, however, are solely the responsibility of the testator. Only through a will may an individual direct the disposition of his estate. Without a will, an estate will be distributed according to the law and such distribution may bear no resemblance to the individual's intentions. Most experts recommend that a will be drawn as early in life as practical, then revised periodically as circumstances change.

ADDING A CODICIL

If a will has already been drawn, and if no major revision is involved, a bequest may be provided through the addition of a codicil. It is a simple procedure, but here again an attorney's services are essential.

BEQUESTS CAN BE ECONOMICAL

When making a will, a person usually uses this time to assign priorities and to arrange for an orderly distribution of his assets. This is also the time to consider a bequest to Susquehanna University. Usually, the prime reason for considering such a bequest is the testator's belief in Susquehanna and in private higher education. However, additional incentive is often provided by the tax benefits which may accrue to the donor's estate and to the beneficiaries.

The Federal government has always encouraged the use of bequests as a vehicle for charitable giving. When a bequest is made to Susquehanna, for example, there is an unlimited deduction for the value of the property left to the University. By making such a bequest, the effect is to reduce the Federal tax obligation on the estate. Since the Federal government does not impose any limitations on the amount of deduction, a person could leave his entire estate to charity and completely eliminate the Federal Estate Tax.

More realistically, the following table denotes the cost to an estate of a $10,000 charitable bequest to Susquehanna.

Taxable Estate* (before gift)	Federal Tax Rate	Net Cost of Gift	Tax Savings
$ 50,000	22%	$7,800	$2,200
$120,000	30%	$7,000	$3,000
$260,000	32%	$6,800	$3,200

By the same token, a bequest of $25,000 to Susquehanna would have the following effect.

Taxable Estate* (before gift)	Federal Tax Rate	Net Cost of Gift	Tax Savings
$ 50,000	22%	$19,500	$5,500
$120,000	30%	$17,500	$7,500
$260,000	32%	$17,000	$8,000

In summary, a donor with a taxable estate of $50,000 can make a $10,000 bequest to Susquehanna at a

* Amount left after subtracting all deductions and the $60,000 exemption.

AN UNRESTRICTED BEQUEST

I give to Susquehanna University, Selinsgrove, Pennsylvania, $ dollars.

I give to Susquehanna University, Selinsgrove, Pennsylvania the sum of $ dollars, the income only to be used for general purposes of the University.

(Optional addition: This gift is made in memory of and shall be known as the Fund.)

A BEQUEST FOR A SPECIFIED PURPOSE

I give to Susquehanna University, Selinsgrove, Pennsylvania, $ dollars. This gift shall be used both as to principal and income for (description of the purpose of the gift.)

A BEQUEST THAT IS TO BE HELD AS A PERMANENT FUND, THE INCOME ONLY TO BE USED FOR A SPECIFIC PURPOSE

I give to Susquehanna University, Selinsgrove, Pennsylvania, $ dollars, the income only to be used for (description of the purpose of the gift.)

A BEQUEST TO PERPETUATE ANNUAL GIVING

I give to Susquehanna University, Selinsgrove, Pennsylvania $ dollars, the principal of which shall be invested and reinvested as the Directors of the University may deem best, the income only to be used at the discretion of the said Board of Directors for its general purposes, and said income to be recorded with respect to the testator and the Class of in the records of the annual Susquehanna University Fund of Susquehanna University.

net cost to the estate of $7,800. Optionally, a $25,000 bequest will cost the donor only $19,500. This represents prudent planning which can serve both to provide for Susquehanna's future and result in significant tax savings.

SOMETHING OF PERMANENCE

Future generations of students can look forward to a meaningful education at Susquehanna only if those of the present generation of alumni and friends continue the tradition of adding substance to the University. The opportunities are many and the sample forms given here provide examples of how one may do something of permanence at Susquehanna. Dollar signs are used for illustrative purposes; but, because of the fluctuation in the value of the dollar and, therefore, the value of an estate, many donors specify a certain percentage of the net estate for each bequest.

A WORD ABOUT CONTINGENT BENEFICIARY

The maker of a will has the right to provide for a contingent beneficiary in the event that the principal beneficiaries do not survive him. It is suggested that Susquehanna University would be an appropriate contingent beneficiary.

The University is pleased to provide this information about bequests. Questions and additional information can be secured by writing to:

Jobs For Alumni

EACH YEAR 80 to 82 percent of Susquehanna's seniors file applications with the University Placement Service which they hope will help them find suitable positions upon graduation. Under the very able direction of Frances MacCuish since 1966, the Placement Office has gained a sound reputation. Five years ago the number of recruiters visiting Susquehanna to talk with seniors reached a peak figure of 127, including 85 representatives from business, 38 from schools, and 4 from the military. While in some cases the degree of help is indirect or supportive, rather than direct, 76 percent of those applicants were placed.

Current unemployment problems have reached up into the educated, as well as the labor groups, blue-collar and white-collar groups. Last year, only 52 recruiters showed up to talk with Susquehanna seniors and, at this point, it appears that the total this spring will not exceed 35. Jobs are scarce—especially for teachers. A dramatic exception in this field is music, where Bill Roberts '29 of the music faculty, working with the Placement Office, has in recent years done yeoman service in helping to place 100 percent of the music ed graduates.

Two nationwide surveys announce that major corporations will hire about the same number to somewhat fewer college graduates this year than they did last year—when placement was slightly down at Susquehanna. The outlook for engineers is characterized as "bright," for those headed for accounting or other financial-type positions, "fairly good." Prospects for graduates in most other disciplines are described as "slim."

All alumni who may be contemplating hiring personnel, or are familiar with job opportunities anywhere, are urged to contact Mrs. MacCuish at the University. You can be of great help to your Alma Mater and its seniors—37 majoring in business, 22 in accounting, 26 in music education, 37 seeking other teaching posts, 141 in liberal arts.

Alumni, too, are welcome to file applications with Susquehanna's Placement Office. They are also being placed, and the number of alumni registrants has doubled in the past year.

October 27, 1974. Much-loved piano teacher at Susquehanna for 42 years, she retired with emeritus status in 1967. Miss Potteiger had studied piano pedagogy under Leopold Poldosky and also done graduate work at New York University. She was active in professional organizations and Sigma Alpha Iota as well as the University's Women's Auxiliary and Sharon Lutheran Church. Among her survivors are sisters Mildred Potteiger '29 and Helen Potteiger Oberdorf, a member of Susquehanna's library staff, and sister-in-law Marion Moyer Potteiger '17, widow of

Dr. Robert J. Potteiger x'18. She was a sister of three previously-deceased alumni—Anna L. Potteiger '12, Albert R. Potteiger '20, and Jack Potteiger x'29.

Amy A. Swab '24, Elizabethville, Pa., November 6, 1974. Also a graduate of the Peirce School of Business Administration, she was a registered representative in investments. She was a member of St. John's Lutheran Church, Berrysburg.

Dr. George S. Moyer '22, Freeburg, Pa., November 14, 1974. A graduate of the Eastman School of Business, he earned the M.A. and Ph.D. in political science from the University of Pennsylvania, and the B.D. from Duke University. He headed economics departments successively at the University of Louisville, Lenoir Rhyne College, and Catawba College. He was a life-long member of Freeburg United Church of Christ and active in many civic organizations, and was a decorated U.S. Army veteran of World War II.

William S. Shipman, Sunbury, Pa., November 17, 1974. He was the father of the Rev. W. Stevens Shipman '69.

Dr. Francis R. Geigle '33, DeKalb, Ill., November 15, 1974. He earned the M.A. and Ed.D. from New York University and held an honorary doctor of humanities degree from Lycoming College, from which he graduated when it was Dickinson Junior College. He taught at Lycoming and Montclair State College, was a New Jersey banker, and began a distinguished educational administrative career at Northern Illinois University in 1951. He retired last year after having served as acting president and then vice president for development and alumni relations. He was a brother of Dr. Ralph C. Geigle '35.

Carrie Zimmerman Klase (Mrs. Franklin), Sunbury, Pa., November 22, 1974. She was the mother of Patricia A. Klase x'59.

Stanford C. Sholley, Lewisburg, Pa., November 22, 1974. He was the father of Dr. Stanford C. Sholley Jr. '62 and Sandra K. Sholley '63.

Edna M. Rowe '33, Mount Carmel, Pa., November 27, 1974. A retired elementary and high school teacher, she was a member of St. Paul's United Methodist Church and past president of the Northumberland County Federation of Women's Club.

Wilbur E. Bennage '15, Lewisburg, Pa., November 29, 1974. A World War I veteran, he became a teacher in Columbia, Pa., and was a correctional officer in the U.S. Penitentiary at Lewisburg until retirement. He was a member of Christ's Lutheran Church.

Pierce A. Coryell '43, Selingsgrove, Pa., January 6, 1975. An Army veteran of World War II, he earned his law degree from the University of Michigan Law School and practiced from his home, the Governor Snyder mansion on Market Street. Borough solicitor for 22 years and a leader in many civic enterprises, he also was an active historian and writer. For the past four years he authored anonymously the highly witty "Along the Trail," a weekly column published in The Selingsgrove Times-Tribune. He was a member of Sharon Lutheran Church. A nephew is David A. Coryell '73, married to the former Susan Hancock '72.

Potter, associate professor of chemistry, his wife and four children were consecrated as missionaries at the Central Pennsylvania Conference, United Church of Christ, held at Susquehanna University. On sabbatical leave, Dr. Potter is teaching this year at Tunghai University in Taichung, Taiwan, which is supported by several Protestant denominations. He recently sent along this picture of the family, "taken at Changhua, about 15 miles from Taichung. The Buddha is claimed to be the largest in southeast Asia."

He writes an interesting letter. Here are a few excerpts—

"We feel we have survived the first few months of 'culture shock' and now can take most things in our stride. We are fortunate in having in our maid a very good cook and thoroughly enjoy Chinese food six nights a week, but everyone looks forward to our bimonthly trips to the Navy snackbar for good old hamburgers. Mary has enjoyed her vacation from household chores, but has been doing other things instead. She has been taking Chinese language lessons since August which we realize is a necessity for at least one member of the household. . . . In addition she is the secretary for Dean Kao in the Environmental Institute and does a lot of typing for Western professors in general. In between stencils and lessons she practices karate and is now the proud owner of a 'yellow belt.'

"The children have adjusted remarkably well. Amy and Andy enjoy their school despite the fact that they must ride in a taxi for half an hour every morning . . . very few children their ages here. Ben and Abby are more fortunate since they attend Chinese kindergarten and have been able to make a few Chinese friends. Abby has picked up enough Chinese so that she and Mary . . . make their little friends feel somewhat at home to play here.

"With all the grades in I can say that I have been pleased with the students' performance this first semester. I gave them the same tests I gave at Susquehanna last year and the averages were about the same. Tunghai has many problems but I will return home knowing that we are able to solve some of them in the Chemistry Department. Interestingly enough, the communication problem has been very small. . . ."

Their friends at Susquehanna wish the Potters the very best in their remaining time in Taiwan, and look forward to their return later this year.

THE PHENOMENON of "rising expectations" makes the 1974 Crusader football campaign difficult to assess. Although the 4-5-1 record fell short of the pre-season goal of a winning season, it was the best mark since 1970, and the team's playing performances were much better than its record indicates. But those outstanding efforts caused many S.U. fans to wish for better results, and to wonder why a team with such talent could not post more wins.

The sad truth is that at least three defeats (Westminster, Albright, Waynesburg) came at the hands of teams that were clearly outplayed by Susquehanna, and two losses (Juniata, Wilkes) and the one tie were contests that could have been won. The Crusaders were never out of any game they played, and there was little doubt about any of the four victories. But the team was repeatedly unable to avoid the mistakes and make the big plays that could have made a difference in the six close games that were lost or tied.

The final statistics indicate the extent to which Susquehanna dominated its opposition, with advantages of 16.3 to 11.6 in points per game, 19.2 to 15.4 per game in first downs, 177.8 to 143.9 in net rushing yardage, 121.5 to 106 in passing yardage, and 300.7 to 249.9 in total offense.

At the post-season banquet, Quarterback Club members called it "the best 4-5-1 team in the country." But assistant coach Dick Purnell, accustomed to winning championships as coach at Shikellamy High School, noted that the players and coaching staff would gladly "trade that excellent 4-5-1 mark for the worst 9-0 record in the country next year." The schedule is back down to nine games in 1975. Geneva is off the slate, but the other opponents are the same as in 1974.

The opening game set the tone for the season. Susquehanna had Grove City on the ropes, driving for a possible touchdown or at least a "chip-shot" field goal try by Chuck Smeltz '75 of Sunbury when a last minute pass that was supposed to go out of bounds to stop the clock was intercepted in the end zone by Grove City, the game ending in a 14-14 tie.

S.U. outgained Westminster 256 total yards to 130, but lost four fumbles and the game, 14-7. The Crusaders stayed even with Juniata in yards gained, but again lost four fumbles, and were defeated by 21-7.

Susquehanna dominated Geneva and scored a 31-0 whitewash for its first victory as Smeltz broke the NCAA College Division record for consecutive extra point kicks with his 66th in a row. The Crusaders manhandled Albright, unbeaten at the time, for three quarters, and took a 9-0 lead into the final period. Then the offense fizzled and the defense fell apart, and Albright pulled out a 14-9 victory. The offense was "flat" against Delaware Valley, coach Jim Hazlett said, but the defense scored its second shutout of the season and a 14-0 victory. Wilkes, which won the MAC-North crown, had a tough time with S.U. The margin of the Colonels' 10-8 victory came from the longest field goal in Wilkes history (41 yards), and was nearly eclipsed in the closing seconds by a 48-yard Smeltz attempt that was between the uprights but fell just short of the crossbar.

The Crusaders handed Lycoming an 18-3 halftime lead, before pulling themselves together and storming back to score a 30-18 victory. In showing the game films, assistant coach Charlie Kunes felt obliged to preface the second half by saying, "now these are the same players wearing the same numbers as in the first half." He could have cracked the same joke the following week, but it wouldn't have been funny. The Crusaders followed their most stirring comeback of the season with their most disappointing collapse.

The Hazlettmen physically beat up Waynesburg throughout the first half, and only several costly penalties kept them from building up more than a 10-0 lead. But during intermission, in the cold, damp, cinderblock shed "locker room," the spirit born a week earlier at Lycoming somehow died, and the second half at Waynesburg was played by the same team that had stumbled through the first half in Williamsport. With a last-minute field goal, Waynesburg pulled out an 11-10 victory.

The season ended with something expected, Upsala's 17th straight loss, and something unexpected, a missed PAT by Smeltz. Enroute to a 33-14 rout, the Crusaders packed three touchdowns into the first quarter, and Smeltz booted the PATs to run his NCAA College Division record total to 75 in a row. Then, with the University Division record of 77 within reach, Smeltz missed for the first time in his college career on both his 76th and 77th attempts.

The number of post-season laurels heaped on the Crusaders confirmed that they were a pretty good 4-5-1 group. Smeltz was named as place-kicker on the All-East, ECAC Division III, and MAC-North all-star teams. He also made MAC-North as a defensive end. Others receiving league honors were quarterback Mike Buterbaugh '75 (Gibsonia, Pa.) who led the division in passing and total offense, split end Jeff Steltz '76 (Wyomissing, Pa.), offensive tackle Bob Brett '75 (Roslyn, Pa.), linebacker Joe LoCastro '76 (Barrington, N.J.), and safety Pete Rambo '75 (Philadelphia). Receiving honorable mention on the All-State team were Brett and offensive tackle Gerry Huesken '77

(Palmyra, N.J.), who also was given honorable mention on the AP Little All-American squad. Brett was also named as one of the top 35 fall season Scholar-Athletes in the country by the NCAA.

The annual All-Lutheran College selections from among 28 Lutheran colleges in the nation included Smeltz as kicking specialist on the second team offense, with honorable mention going to Brett, Buterbaugh and Rambo.

Receiving S.U. coaching staff awards were Smeltz, Clyde R. Spitzner MVP Award; Rambo, best back; defensive tackle Pat Lowe '76 (Johnson City, N.Y.), best lineman; fullback Paul O'Neill '78 (Stratford, N.J.) best rookie; halfback Jim Camut '77 (Johnstown, Pa.), most improved; safety Dave Breyemeier '78 (Duryea, Pa.), most aggressive; split end John Xanthis '77 (Newburgh, N.Y.), best reserve back; and two-way tackle Mike Piersol '78 (Sinking Spring, Pa.), best reserve lineman. Buterbaugh was cited for setting a new school record with 92 pass completions during the season, surpassing Ernie Tyler's 1969 total of 87.

Although noting that occasional momentary lapses had cost games, Hazlett praised the 1974 squad as the most cooperative and hardest-working he has coached. The offensive line especially drew praise from Hazlett throughout the season. With 27 lettermen expected to return, perhaps next year the Crusaders can satisfy even the "Monday morning quarterbacks" who are happy only with victories.

SUSQUEHANNA UNIVERSITY has completed 76 seasons of football since the first in 1892 for a grand total of 569 games:
228 wins, 304 losses, 37 ties.

Field Hockey

The biggest surprise of the fall was the field hockey team. Under first-year coach Connie Delbaugh, the women surpassed the win total and equaled the goal total of the entire 1973 season in their first game, a 2-1 win over Juniata; equaled the win total of the previous three years combined in the second outing, a 1-0 decision over Bucknell; and went on to achieve the first winning field hockey campaign since 1962 with a 5-4 mark.

Leading the team in goals were Sally Scheid '75 (Oreland, Pa.) and Leslie Beers '76 (Springfield, Pa.). Liz Graham '75 (Bethesda, Md.) earned her fourth letter at center halfback and Bev Hafer '75 (New Columbia, Pa.) was outstanding as goalie. The team received a big boost from four freshmen who lettered: JoAnn Kinkel (Red Lion, Pa.), Audrey Kiljian (Media, Pa.), Margaret Schozer (Wantagh, N.Y.), and Anne Guckes (West Chester, Pa.), who is also the only female on Susquehanna's ice hockey club team.

Soccer

The soccer team, under interim coach Will Kepner, set a tough pre-season goal for itself—improving on 1973's 6-2-4 record which was the best in the squad's 14-year history—and fell short with a 6-4-2 regular season mark. But Kepner, filling in while Dr. Neil Potter is on sabbatical in Taiwan, did guide the team to a second consecutive invitation to play in the ECAC regional post-season tournament, where the booters lost to Muhlenberg, 3-0.

Paced by six goals from Kurt Kohler '76 (Grosse Pointe Woods, Mich.), the soccer team equaled the school record for goals in one season with 28. John Waddell '75 (Reedsville, Pa.), who switched from halfback to center fullback, received honorable mention on the MAC-North all-star squad and received a trophy from coach Kepner as the team's best defensive player. Freshmen Brian Jadney (Churchville, Pa.) and Tom Cook (Loysville, Pa.) were co-winners of the best rookie award. The squad elected Pat Kreger '76 (Trenton, N.J.) and Jim Schrader '77 (Livingston, N.J.) as co-captains for 1975.

The high points of the 1974 campaign came at the beginning and the end of the regular season. The booters started with three straight wins by a combined margin of 11-2, and ended with a come-from-behind 3-2 victory over a Dickinson team that had defeated S.U. in 1973.

Cross Country

Coach Bruce Wagenseller said the 1974 cross country season taught him something: "Don't make any predictions." With all eight 1973 lettermen expected to return, Wagenseller had hoped the squad would at least equal the previous year's 8-5 record. However, three lettermen decided not to participate in 1974 and before the campaign's end the two top runners, Jeff Yoder '76 (Mt. Carmel, Pa.) and Joe Cramer '77 (Toms River, N.J.), were both lost to injuries. This left Wagenseller with an eight-man squad which managed a 6-8 mark—highly respectable under the circumstances. Freshman Robert Whomsley (Cherry Hill, N.J.) received trophies from the coach as both the outstanding rookie and the highest point man on the squad.

Winter Sports

It is too early as this goes to press to draw any final conclusions, but at the Christmas break the wrestling and basketball squads were doing the reverse of what had been expected. The grapplers, not entertaining great hopes with only four lettermen returning from a 3-7 team, went home for Christmas with a 2-0 mark, while the basketball squad, hoping for a fine year with eight lettermen back from a 13-12 group, came out of the Lutheran Brotherhood Tournament in Minneapolis over vacation with a 2-6 record.

The wrestlers opened with a 30-24 win over Juniata and followed with a 20-18 decision over Messiah in which a win by freshman heavyweight Mike Piersol (Sinking Spring, Pa.) in the final match climaxed a Crusader comeback. The basketball team topped Messiah 73-65 for its first win after four straight defeats. Junior forward Dave Long (Doylestown, Pa.) averaged 18 points over the first five games, followed by freshman guard Mike Scheib (Millersburg, Pa.) with 11.4 and senior forward Ralph Wolckenhauer (River Vale, N.J.) with 11.2. In Minneapolis, the cagers lost to Augsburg, defeated Upsala, and were nipped 61-60 by Luther.

All-American

The most impressive S.U. athletic performance of the fall was turned in by a member of the women's physical education faculty and coaching staff. Rose Ann Neff, new head women's basketball and assistant field hockey coach, earned selection on the U.S. National Field Hockey Squad for her play as captain of the Mid-East regional team in the U.S. Field Hockey Association National Tournament at DeKalb, Ill., in November. Last spring Miss Neff was chosen as a reserve member of the National Women's Lacrosse Team. She is also good at golf and tennis, and at the noon hour can be seen on the basketball court dribbling circles around male faculty and administration members.

ON OUR COVER: Following Commencement on May 31, President Gustave W. Weber (at right) chats with three who received honorary degrees: Pauline Tompkins, president of Cedar Crest College and Commencement speaker, Litt.D.; The Rev. Carl H. Mau, general secretary of the Lutheran World Federation and Baccalaureate preacher, L.L.D.; The Rev. Manas Buthelezi, South African Lutheran leader, D.D.

A political scientist, Dr. Tompkins is a former executive of the American Association of University Women and serves in several important national educational posts. Dr. Mau, whose headquarters are in Geneva, Switzerland, represents 55 million Lutherans throughout the world. Dr. Buthelezi, currently head of the Christian Institute in Natal Province, is the only person ever to have lifted the "ban" imposed by the apartheid government of his country.

C. Willard Smith of Bucknell University was given the Pd.D. (see page 21).

The Sights and Sounds Of Alumni Weekend

Alumni Weekend is one of the more exciting times of the year at Susquehanna and this year was no exception. The dates were May 2, 3, and 4. On these few pages the Alumnus depicts some of the weekend sights for its readers. The sounds, since the magazine is not on tape, can only be suggested—sounds like the click of a club hitting a golf ball, the squeal of delight when someone recognizes an old roommate, the din of voices and laughter and Rudy Gelnett's piano at Jack Shipe's and at the crowded luncheon, the reading of award citations and the appreciative applause, Dr. Weber's jokes and Johnny Gensel's Weber-story, the cheers for the homerun that won the first of two baseball games for the Crusaders, the dinner-dance music, and Bob Sander's Sunday morning sermon. . .

MINUTES OF ALUMNI ASSOCIATION MEETING

THE SUSQUEHANNA UNIVERSITY Alumni Association met in the Campus Center at Selinsgrove on Saturday, May 3, 1975 for the annual Alumni Weekend business session in connection with the Alumni Luncheon. There were 502 in attendance. The meeting was called to order by President George Bantley '41 and the invocation was pronounced by the Rev. Dr. Edgar S. Brown '75, chaplain to the University.

Following the luncheon, Buss Carr '52, director of alumni relations, introduced May Queen Charlotte Graham of Lebanon, Pa., members of her court and their elected escorts who assisted Bob Hackenberg '56 in presenting remembrances to emeriti alumni and those celebrating the 50th anniversary of their graduation. Other reunion classes recognized were 1930, 1935, 1940, 1945, 1950, 1955, 1960, and 1965. The Class of 1975 was received into the Alumni Association and its president, Charles Janaskie of Camp Hill, Pa., announced the class gift of a campus park to be located in front of the Campus Center. The gift was accepted by Dr. Weber, president of the University, with appropriate remarks.

The business session opened with a motion to approve the minutes of the last meeting as reproduced and distributed. Bob Hackenberg, Alumni Day chairman, announced the weekend schedule and expressed appreciation to the persons who were instrumental in making the weekend a success. Lester Heilman '52, chairman of Club Activities, announced that there were 11 area club meetings held this year with over 400 alumni attending. One particular activity that was successful was the planning of meetings in connection with concerts by the Susquehanna Band or Choir. Buss Carr '52, reporting for the Nominations Committee, announced the results of the election for the five members-at-large to the Alumni Executive Committee: D. Edgar Hutchison '34, Timothy E. Barnes '35, Gene L. Stock '56, Judith A. Blee '62, Martha A. Fisher '73. The slate of nominees for office for the coming year: George H. Bantley '41, president; William C. Davenport '53, and Robert Hackenberg '56, vice presidents; Signe S. Gates '71, secretary; Chester G. Rowe '52, treasurer. There were no further nominations from the floor. Nominations were closed and the secretary was instructed to cast a single ballot for the entire slate. William C. Davenport '53, chairman of the University Relations Committee, referred to the published minutes with special mention of alumni help in student placement, and recommended that an alumni directory be published at the earliest possible time. Buss Carr then presented Mrs. Margaret Ernst, secretary in the Alumni Office, with a watch from the Alumni Association. She is retiring June 1, 1975.

Awards Committee Chairman Donald E. Wissinger '50 made these presentations for 1975: Distinguished Citizenship Award to Barbara Miller Mitchell of Selinsgrove; Senior Man and Woman Most Typifying the Ideals of Susquehanna to John D. Granger of Cleona, Pa. and Susan B. Gordon of Johnstown, Pa.; Achievement Medal to the Rev. Dr. John Garcia Gensel '40 of New York City; Service Medals to Blanche Forney Rogers '42 and Edward S. Rogers '42 of Yardley, Pa.

The luncheon meeting was adjourned with the singing of the Alma Mater.

Respectfully submitted,
Signe S. Gates '71, Secretary

SUSQUEHANNA'S 1975 Alumni Award medals were presented to the Rev. John Garcia Gensel '40, for Achievement, and Blanche Forney Rogers '42 and Edward S. Rogers '42, for Service.

Dr. Gensel (he was conferred with his alma mater's D.D. in 1963) is well known as pastor to the jazz community in New York City. A native of Puerto Rico and raised in Catawissa, Pa., he went from S.U. to the Lutheran Theological Seminary at Gettysburg, served as a chaplain in the U.S. Navy, held pastorates in Ohio and Puerto Rico, and has been in New York since 1956. He began his unique ministry in 1959 and it has been a full-time calling for him for the past 10 years. His base is St. Peter's Lutheran Church in Manhattan, where he is associate pastor and where the jazz idiom is an integral part of many religious services.

The Rogers couple, who live in Yardley, Pa., have been leaders in alumni activities for many years—hosting freshman parties, taking part in telethons, recruiting students, and holding office on boards and committees. Mr. Rogers is a past president of the Alumni Association and currently a member of the University Board of Directors. A research engineer at the David Sarnoff Research Center for RCA in Princeton, N.J., he has published papers in the field of acoustics and communication systems, holds a number of patents, and has received several professional achievement awards. He earned an M.S. at Case Institute of Technology.

Plastino: PARALEGAL INTERN

by PETER SILVESTRI

The subject of this article at work in the Sunbury office of Central Susquehanna Valley Legal Services.

TONY PLASTINO '76 of Lancaster, Pa. spent the spring term learning about politics and society and examining his own values and future career goals through a new internship program of the Susquehanna University Political Science Department.

The 10-week program involved about 25 hours per week serving a paralegal internship in the Sunbury office of Central Susquehanna Valley Legal Services. Tony received two course credits for a first hand education in civil and criminal law and the problems of the poor in today's society. His work for the legal aid office ranged from researching case precedents in law libraries to setting up a series of lectures and discussions for senior citizens on legal problems of the aged.

However, as is the case with students who have been involved in the other internships offered by Susquehanna in various business and social service situations, Tony found that the most valuable knowledge and insights he gained from the experience were related to personal growth and development rather than strictly academic matters. He says that the internship aided the establishment of his own career goals by allowing him to "see into the future" and experience the workaday world and what it is to "be responsible" as a concerned and contributing member of society.

Tony knows that it is easy for a student to live in a "wonderland world" in blissful ignorance or disregard of the realities of life, both in terms of making a living for oneself and being of service to others. He says that the internship gave him the opportunity to "test" himself in a life situation in which he might find himself after graduation. This testing process concerned many personal questions to which Tony did not have the answers: How deep and lasting was his interest in practicing law? How competent could he be at this vocation in particular or at "working with other people" in an "office" environment in general? How strong was his desire and commitment to work "to help others" rather than to pursue "the buck."

The internship arrangement also benefits Legal Services, which can use the help, according to Joseph

In the unimposing headquarters of Legal Services, Tony confers with director Campagna and other staff members.

Campagna, director of the Sunbury office of the Central Susquehanna Valley organization. Not being a profit-making venture, Legal Services is dependent on funding from Federal, state and local governments. Some politicians resent and distrust the legal aid people, who tend to act as a "watchdog" over governmental agencies, and are not overly generous with financial support. That Legal Services are not lavishly funded is evident from the humble headquarters facility of the Sunbury office, located in a partially renovated old two-family house on Market Street.

The internship began during the third term this year, but the Political Science Department and Legal Services hope that one student can be placed in the legal aid office during each term in the future. Tony is a political science major, but the program will also be open to students in other related fields.

Legal Services are "advocacy oriented," Tony says. In addition to providing legal assistance to individuals who come in with problems and cannot afford to hire a private attorney, Legal Services seeks to protect the rights of all poor people with regard to government and public and private agencies and to advocate changes to make those bodies more responsive to the public interest. As examples, Tony cites a dispute between Legal Services and local courts over compliance with a Supreme Court ruling that indigents be allowed to file for divorce without paying a $175 court fee, and an effort by Legal Services to end what it believes are discriminatory admissions policies by local housing authorities.

Court cases can involve litigation between a tenant and landlord, buyer and seller, debtor and creditor, or suits over personal and family matters. Intervention with an agency on behalf of a client can involve an issue such as a person who believes he is not getting what he is entitled to from social security, workman's compensation, unemployment or veterans' disability payments.

Tony conducted some client interviews and fact investigations, but his major projects during the ten weeks were to organize research files on categories of cases for the legal aid office and to arrange the lecture series for senior citizens. Tony got speakers from various public and private agencies to talk to the elderly on such topics as insurance, nursing homes, wills, welfare, social security, tenant rights, and consumer complaints. The purpose, Tony says, is "to inform senior citizens of their rights and how to help themselves and advise their friends." He says that the elderly are often ignorant of their rights and when they believe they are being treated wrongly they are often "afraid to make waves and unaware of people who can help them."

Tony's role in the work of the legal aid office kept him busy. He found the staff very cooperative and helpful, but he knew that they could not afford to take too much time away from their professional duties to explain things to him. "I had to be on my toes," he says, so that he did not have to be told the same thing twice. Getting up every morning and spending four to six hours on the job left him "beat" when he returned to campus or his apartment in Selinsgrove. In addition to serving the internship, he also took one course on campus during the term. Unlike some other Susquehanna student interns, Tony received no stipend for his labors. But he has no complaint about that. He says that the experience he gained was payment enough. Tony's life is not all work, however. During the spring term he also found time to play with the highly successful Susquehanna Rugby Club, and in the fall he is a first string defensive end with the Crusader football team.

Tony says that through the internship experience he was "stimulated in a lot of ways," and found answers to the questions referred to previously. He thinks that he will go to law school and pursue a "socially-oriented" career in legal services for the poor. He believes that legal aid people are "understaffed and underpaid" and he learned that "sad things can happen to poor people." But he sees no cause for despair and prefers being aware of the unpleasant aspects of life and having feelings for others rather than becoming "a robot." He says he wants to "maintain a human attitude" and believes he "can help and can get results."

THE LOCAL SCENE

by GEORGE TAMKE

WHEN DR. WALTER FREED told the Board of Directors that Cedar Crest College President Pauline Tompkins was to be the first woman ever to deliver the Commencement address at Susquehanna, I noticed a coed observer (and just what is a coed in this Age of Women's Liberation?) offer a cheering gesture with her right arm.

It made me think of Billy Jean King's famous tennis victory, and Gloria Steinem and Barbara Jordan and Connie Parvey and other women in the recent news who have been actively championing women's rights or simply making it in fields heretofore reserved largely for men. And it reminded me that Susquehanna (then Missionary Institute) was really one of the pioneers in coeducation when it admitted women students in 1873. And that it was in danger of going completely the other way in the late '20s when a study of all its church-related colleges conducted by the then-United Lutheran Church suggested that Susquehanna ought to become a women's college.

But it didn't and I'm glad. Because coeducation has flourished mightily at Susquehanna. It has produced some fine student leaders, and great teachers, musicians, doctors and businesswomen among the fairer sex (dare I call them that?). And it has helped produce many happy families, too!

Now, the skeptics may be tempted to think that this University has been party to one grand put-up job to exploit the International Women's Year. After all, we not only had our first woman Commencement speaker, Barbara Mitchell was the first woman winner of the Distinguished Citizenship Award. The 1975 Lanthorn was dedicated to Dean of Freshmen Dorothy Anderson '62. And one of our gals, Margy DuVal '76 of Montclair, N.J., was elected the national president of the Intercollegiate Association of Women Students. But that's not the way it was. I was privy to some of the discussions and selections and I know there was no put-up job. These women, bless 'em, were chosen fairly and squarely—for themselves.

So, we welcomed Dr. Tompkins to our podium and we congratulate, again, the winners of awards and offices. And we're happy to say thank you to our women for all they have done for Susquehanna and for us. . . .

Which brings us to Peg Ernst. Margaret (Mrs. Donald) Ernst joined the secretarial staff at Susquehanna on May 1, 1959. Originally, she worked for the late Dan MacCuish while he was still wearing three hats for admissions, alumni and public relations. When I arrived in June she did letters and news releases for me, too. And when Don Wissinger '50 assumed the alumni relations job in September, Peg was the official veteran secretary in the Alumni Office. She was with Don for three years, with John Hendricks '57 for one year, another year virtually on her own, and then with Buss Carr '52 for the past 11 years—16 years in a key spot of continuing contact with thousands of alumni.

Peg Ernst, Alumni Office secretary, checks the time with Buss Carr '52, director of alumni relations, who surprised her at the May 3 Alumni Luncheon with presentation of a watch recognizing her 16 years of service.

I'll never forget that year of 1963-64 when we didn't have an alumni relations director. Keeping things running kind of fell to me. We were in the midst of a capital campaign, too, so "keeping things running" in the Alumni Office kind of fell to Peg. She kept things running then, as she had before and has ever since. She has our everlasting gratitude.

Peg, of course, has been much more than a secretary. Besides receiving dictation and transcribing thousands of letters, she wrote many hundreds more herself, spent hours culling newspapers and making telephone calls to track down the details of an alumni story, a marriage, a birth, a death. In 16 years, she prepared a whale of a lot of material for this magazine. She has been our star reporter.

Peg Ernst has given of herself as a way of life, with diligence, with unflagging loyalty, and with good humor. She gave Susquehanna her four children, too—Dr. Mary Lou Ernst Fonberg '58, Sonja Ernst Sampsell x'63, Sharon Ernst Lauver '68, and Donald Ernst '74. We salute her as she retires from our midst, and wish her many years of much-deserved happiness.

Turning to another subject, we were quite thrilled the other week to read a couple of reviews from European critics

A great man for Susquehanna and for the Pennsylvania Dutch

RUSSELL GILBERT

DR. RUSSELL W. GILBERT, professor emeritus of German, was honored by The Pennsylvania German Society with an April 26 presentation of a Citation "in appreciation for the contributions he has made to the study of the Pennsylvania Germans, to the dialect literature, and to this Society which he has served, since 1946, as director, vice president, and president."

The attractive document, in fraktur and colors, includes a stanza from "Gott Is Mei Freund im Ganse Yaahr" (God Is My Friend the Whole Year Through), one of 100 of the professor's poems recently published in Bilder un Gedanke (Pictures and Thoughts), which also happens to be the 100th volume published by the Society and its predecessors, the Pennsylvania German Society and the Pennsylvania German Folklore Society.

Dr. Gilbert, who taught at Susquehanna for 40 years until his retirement in 1970, is regarded as the "best contemporary dialect poet" in a language which was once almost exclusively spoken, rather than written. His book is a delight, even for the reader who does not understand "Dutch," as each poem is accompanied by a brief explanation or translation. Selected from all his verse written between 1943 and 1974, the poems are rich in humor, imagery, color, and lyric quality.

Editor of this magazine during World War II, the poet had a very active career while at the University—chairing the Modern Languages Department as well as the Athletic Committee, coaching debate, even officiating at baseball games. He still keeps busy, but is not quite as active after several hospital visits. He and Mrs. Gilbert are the parents of Joyce K. Gilbert '54, assistant registrar at S.U., and Arlan K. Gilbert '55, who teaches history at Hillsdale College.

concerning appearances of Susquehanna's Band and Choir in late winter (see inside front cover). In La Republique du Centre, J. Pascual wrote of the concert in the Chartres Cathedral:

"It must be said that the orchestra is of a rare quality, and the calculated measure of tone quality is in relationship to the density and volume maintained at constant balance, important details which are not overlooked by director James Steffy. . . . Woodwinds and brass gave a consistently clear vision of the polyphonic blend, of the sonorous pleasure of a well-adjusted interpretation."

Of Cy Stretansky's Choir, this reviewer "admired the value of these voices which rendered to us skillfully and easily as many shades of meaning as the sentiments with which they ('Ave Maria' of des Pres, 'Verbum coro Factum est' of Hassler, and 'Holy, Holy, Holy' of Mendelssohn) are overflowing can suggest. . . . Let us then be grateful for the merits of these delightful performers. . . ."

Writing of the concert in Dinkelsbühl, Hanns Brunner expressed surprise that the young musicians had no trace of fatigue at this concluding performance of their ten-day tour, and at the variety of the program. "Indeed," said he, "there has rarely been an opportunity for local music lovers to hear a concert of such a wide range of styles. . . . they master the musical language of the past and present with as much enthusiasm and pep as the big, wide-open American heart can stand. . . ."

"These 'Benjamins of instrumental music' took the hurdles of technically difficult musical figures with great skill and accomplishment," bearing witness "to an amazing musical discipline which is the result of careful and high quality training. . . . They like to make music with a fresh spirit and nonchalance, even with a bit of magic. The result is a demonstration of accomplished and spontaneous concert music which fascinates the audience. . . . a friend of the muses will not likely forget this quickly."

We always knew our Susquehanna musicians were good, but it's nice, too, to know that these Ambassadors are so well appreciated by our friends overseas.

BOOKS,

A COMMON DILEMMA these days is that of the liberal arts major who can't find a job in his field after graduating from college. It's too bad a solution to this problem is not always as easy as it was for Susquehanna English major Don Ernst '74 of Selinsgrove.

During the first few months after his graduation last May Don ran into several dead ends in his search for a writing or editing job with a newspaper or book publishing firm, and acquired a distaste for the one job he could find as a factory worker. Having failed at finding employment suitable for a lover of books and disliking the alternatives, Don went to work for himself by opening his own "Old Book Store," Selinsgrove's newest business establishment located at 27 Market St. in the former home of the Cobbler's Bench shoe store.

This enterprising move was easier for Don than it would be for most English majors one year out of college, however. He had a pretty good head start on setting up a book store since his father, Don Ernst Sr., has been a rare book collector and mail order book dealer for the past 13 years. A retired Weis Markets district manager, Ernst Sr. has accumulated about 4000 books while pursuing his hobby. He began by buying a warehouse full of books and he replenishes his stock at auctions and garage and attic sales. He conducts a "search service," trying to locate specific books requested by customers, and utilizes the periodical Antiquarian Bookman publications where dealers' wares and customers' needs are advertised. The Ernst family, living amidst so many books, had often discussed the possibility of opening up a book shop and with Don's availability for the proprietor's role the idea became a reality in February.

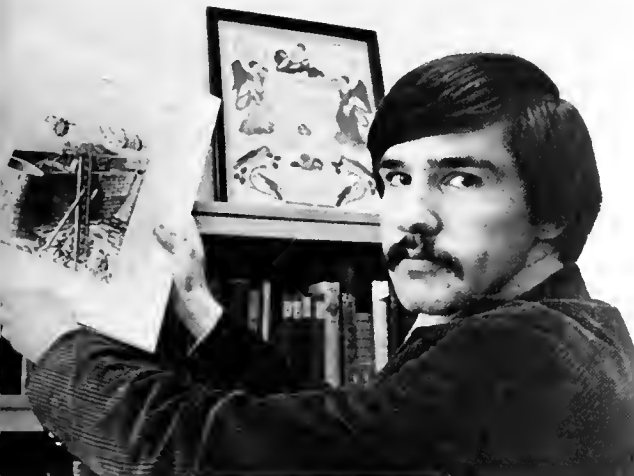

So far business has been good, even better than the Ernsts expected. "It's a better situation than I ever thought I'd get into," says Don. The best customer, he says, has been a man from Maryland who travels through Selinsgrove regularly on business. The man said he was interested in law and wanted to build up a library and write a book on constitutional law. He stopped in twice and spent a total of $500. "He bought a lot of old law books that we never thought we'd be able to sell," Don relates.

The contents of the shop are varied. Books range from rare 16th and 17th century collector's items selling for $50 to copies of "dime store" novels, to sports, adventure, romance and science fiction stories of more recent past decades, selling for 50 cents. Most of the items are priced between these extremes at a few dollars. These run the gamut from scarce old editions of timeless classics of literature, history and science in individual volumes or collections to century-old guide books, almanacs and atlases which are more interesting today as relics in themselves than as sources of accurate information.

The nature of the customers is as varied as the inventory. The shop attracts university professors searching for a scholarly work now out of print, such as S.U. English instructor Ron Dotterer who paid $2 for a 1930s commentary on used and rare

Coleridge; avid readers seeking some obscure novel of the 1940s; Amish folk wanting one of the Ernsts' many books in German and Pennsylvania Dutch printed in central Pennsylvania in the 19th century; a collector or another book dealer looking for a scarce volume; or an antique lover interested in old books just for the appearance of the thick, gold-inlaid leather bindings.

Don says that he and his father are able to locate about 80 percent of the books requested by customers through the search service. Don has some regular customers who are interested in any book on a particular subject. These pet topics include freemasonry, trolleys, and Roy Rogers and Dale Evans.

Among the more interesting scarce books in the shop are The Sermons of Mathew Mead, in German, printed in "Selins Grove" in 1830; some Mark Twain first editions; a collection of The Spectator, a daily commentary originally written in 1712 and collectively published in London in 1724; a first edition of Snyder County Pioneers autographed by author Dr. Charles A. Fisher; and a collection of Luther's works, one of the first books printed in the state of Pennsylvania, published in Germantown in 1793. The rarest volumes, however, are not kept in the shop but in the Ernsts' home, such as a copy of the New England Primer, the first book printed in this country, dating back to the 1600s. The shop's capacity is about 2500 volumes, only 60 percent of the total Ernst collection.

The hardest aspect of running the shop, according to Don, is pricing the old books. It takes a lot of knowledge and experience to be able to pick out the truly rare volume from the merely old one. Don notes that he has one advantage his father did not have. "He started out cold; I have him to teach me," Don says. One thing that enhances the value of a book is illustrations, he says. In the past, the average book was more lavishly endowed with art work than at present, and the book illustrators of the past were often the most well known artists of their day. In fact, among Don's favorite items is a set of copper plate drawings from the 1600s which have been individually mounted and framed, but were once in a book.

The contents of the store are not limited to books. Don notes that purchase of boxes of books that someone has cleaned out of an attic often turns up such items as stamp collections and old photograph albums, which are also on sale at the shop when available. Some other features of the store were contributed by other members of the Ernst family. The former Sunny Ernst and her husband Joe Lauver, both of Susquehanna's class of '68, built the book shelves as well as some small benches and wood sculptures which are for sale. The Ernsts are definitely an S.U. family. All four children attended Susquehanna, and their mother Peg has been secretary in the Alumni Office since 1959.

And Don, the lover of books "used and rare," from frustration and disappointment is forging a fascinating career he wasn't even contemplating a year ago. A sign in the window says "Come in and browse."

YOU MIGHT SAY it's been a Long year for Susquehanna sports. Dave Long, that is. The 6-6, 190-lb. junior from Doylestown, Pa., a mainstay for the Crusader basketball team for the past three years, passed the 1000 career points mark this winter. This spring, he went out for the S.U. track and field squad for the first time, and proceeded to equal the school record for the high jump in his first intercollegiate meet with a leap of 6-4. Later on in the season he jumped 6-5. He was a consistent winner all season in that event and in the discus to lead the team in scoring with 54 points. At the Middle Atlantic Conference Championships he took fourth in the discus and fifth in the high jump.

Hurdler and relay man Bob Rattelman '75 of Pittsburgh was the high point man among the runners with 47¾. He took second place in the 440-yard intermediate hurdles at the MAC meet in 55.6 seconds. Other MAC point-winners for the eighth place Crusaders were Glenn Levensgood '75 of Gilbertsville, Pa., third place in the javelin; Chuck Yoder '76 of Shamokin, Pa., sixth place in the javelin; and Jeff Yoder '76 of Mt. Carmel, Pa., sixth place in the mile in 4:21.8, breaking his own Susquehanna school record. The track team had a 3-6 record under new coaches Bob Muirhead and Bill Frey.

The Crusader golf team enjoyed an 11-3 record, best golf mark in 10 years and best results in any sport in the last three years at Susquehanna. The golfers were remarkably consistent, the top five never totaling over 400. Their best day was 389 and the average was 394.7, or 78.9 per man. Coach Buss Carr had good depth and balance, with eight different players finishing among the top five during the season. The leader was a freshman, Mike McFatridge of Glen Rock, Pa., who averaged 76.

Other letter-winners were Steve Farrell '76 (Bloomfield, Ct.), 78.6; Doug Holcombe '75 (Somerville, N.J.), 80.2; Bob Carr '75 (East Hanover, N.J.), 81.4; Joe Mafera '77 (Locust Valley, N.Y.), 81.5; Kevin Flanagan '77 (Hamden, Ct.), 82.4; Bruce Dansbury '75 (Yardley, Pa.), 83.5; and Mark Bostic '78 (New Freedom, Pa.), 83.7. The team finished eighth among 19 schools at the MAC Tournament.

Carr, co-captain of the soccer team and captain of the golfers, graduates with four letters in each sport, the first Susquehanna man to earn four letters in two sports since football and track star Don Owens '72.

The baseball team took two games from Penn State Capitol Campus in its last outing, its only sweep in a season of 13 doubleheaders, to finish with an 11-15 record. Freshman catcher Bill Hart, Weatherly, Pa., batted .292 with a team high 2 home runs and 4 doubles, and 10 RBIs to earn coach Jim Hazlett's Best Hitter and Best Rookie awards. Second baseman Brad Moore '77 (Old Saybrook, Ct.) won the Highest Offensive Rating award with a .259 average, 3 doubles, 7 RBIs, and team-leading totals of 14 walks and 13 runs scored. Lefthander Dave Brown '76 (Williamsport, Pa.) had the mound staff's best record at 4-2 and had a 2.00 ERA. Over one stretch he won three games in a row against Elizabethtown, Albright and Lock Haven State, including two 10-inning shutouts and a string of 25-2/3 straight scoreless innings.

The men's tennis team got off to a bad start, losing six of the first eight, but won three of the last four to finish at 5-7. The squad had a new coach in Bill Moore '63. Leading players were Larry Hill '76 (Brick Town, N.J.), Bob Wentz '77 (Haddon Heights, N.J.), Pete Burton '78 (Chatham, N.J.), Jim Packer '76 (Aldan, Pa.), and Bob Danielson '75 (Yorba Linda, Calif.).

Ginny Davis '77 (Warminster, Pa.) was again the only bright light on the women's tennis team. Playing in the first singles position for the second year she had the squad's best record at 5-2. The team took its only victory in its last match, finishing 1-6.

The Crusader basketball team concluded a somewhat disappointing season on a high note by winning four of its last five games, including two Middle Atlantic Conference Northern Division victories, to finish with a 10-13 record, 5-5 in the league.

The most impressive performance of the campaign came in the finale when S.U. upset Scranton by 69-66 to hand the Royals their only MAC-North loss of the year. The Royals went on to win the league's post-season championship tournament. Susquehanna earlier had scored two victories over Upsala, which met Scranton in the title game, giving the Crusaders a 3-0 mark against the league's top two teams.

The season began disastrously with the Crusaders losing their first four games, including three important league outings. Although the team played a great deal of excellent basketball thereafter, its efforts to salvage a winning record were repeatedly stymied by an inability to come through in the close games. Susquehanna had six contests that were decided by one or two points and lost five of them. Perhaps the most frustrating of these narrow defeats was the first, a 61-60 loss to Luther which spoiled an otherwise fine showing at the Lutheran Brotherhood Tournament in Minneapolis over Christmas vacation. The Crusaders threw a scare into host Augsburg in the opening round of the tourney before losing 97-86. S.U. topped Upsala 67-64 in the second round. In the battle for fifth place, the Crusaders led Luther by six points with 1:20 remaining, but lost the lead and had an in-bounds pass stolen by Luther for a game-winning basket with seven seconds left. The Orange and Maroon took some consolation from the fact that Long, who scored 60 points in the three games, was named to the All-Tourney team.

Wolckenhauer '75 (Whiting N.J.), who received coach Barry Keadle's Outstanding Player and Best Offensive Player awards and was named to the second team of the All-Lutheran squad. At 6-2, 170, Wolckenhauer made up for lack of size with drive and determination and was the team's top rebounder with 8.6 per game and second ranking scorer with 14.4 points per game. He had the squad's best field goal shooting percentage by far at .573 and hit .800 from the foul line. Wolckenhauer's name will not appear among S.U. basketball's 1000 Point Club, but those who saw him play will remember him as one of the best all-around performers and among the most inspirational athletes ever to play the hardwood sport at Susquehanna. Few people play with more intensity. With great positioning, leaping ability, and timing, he excelled at the most difficult aspect of the game, offensive rebounding, and regularly scored tap-ins against taller opponents. He played defense with tenacity, chased loose balls with abandon, and could shoot quickly and accurately under pressure. He was also a hustler and team leader on defense. He will be missed.

Mike Scheib, a 5-8 freshman from Millersburg, Pa., started every game at guard and earned the coach's Best Defensive Player award with a team-high 27 steals. An excellent ball-handler, Scheib was also an offensive threat, averaging 11 points per game and leading the team in assists with 50.

Prekopa received the Mr. Basketball award for outstanding contributions in terms of "dedication, team spirit, and courage." He averaged 7.2 points while appearing in all 23 games. Another mainstay also seeing action in every game was 6-3 forward John Neuhauser '76 (Hatboro, Pa.), who averaged 6.1 points and 5.1 rebounds.

The jayvee team, paced by freshman Bill Hart (Weatherly, Pa.) and Bruce Gessner (Philadelphia), compiled a 9-7 mark, the only winning record among S.U. winter sports aggregations.

The wrestling team's record was spoiled by a lack of able bodies that resulted in forfeiture of a total of 31 bouts during the 4-11 campaign. Injuries and academic pressures thinned the squad and by season's end the Crusaders had no grapplers in the 118, 134 and heavyweight classes. However, those who did wrestle never gave up and the squad compiled a 58-60-1 record for the bouts in which it competed.

Top individual was Bill Finch '76 (Westminster, Md.), who carded a 13-2 dual meet record and took fourth place in the Middle Atlantic Conference Tournament in the 150-lb. weight class. He received the Most Takedowns, Most Pins, and Most Valuable Wrestler awards from coach Charlie Kunes.

John Liken '75 (Bloomsburg, Pa.) earned the Most Improved award with his 12-3 record at 158 pounds and Mark Reitz '78 (Jim Thorpe, Pa.) won the Best First-Year Man award with a 10-5 mark at 177 pounds.

Lacking experienced players and practice time, the women's basketball team suffered through a second straight 0-8 campaign and extended its losing string to 20 games. But trail when it nipped Albright 72-70 on a last-second bomb by Joe Prekopa '75 (McAdoo, Pa.) and trimmed Lycoming 73-66 in its first two games after returning from the North Country. However, two consecutive one-point losses followed at Lock Haven and Lebanon Valley. Wins over Grove City and Upsala at home were followed by four straight defeats, three on the road, including a two-point defeat at Juniata and a one-point loss to Wilkes in successive outings. The Crusaders then put together their fine closing spurt which included home wins over Delaware Valley and York and an impressive and important MAC road victory, 75-66 at Wagner.

The Delaware Valley game included Long's 1000th career point. The junior finished the campaign with a total of 1076, placing him eighth on the S.U. all-time list, 106 points behind jayvee coach and Sunbury businessman Bill Moore '63. Long was named to the second team of the MAC-North All-Stars. He finished as the team's top scorer with an average of 16.2 points per game and second rebounder with 7.4 per game.

Susquehanna's most valuable player was forward Ralph the jayvees won two games out of seven, so there is still hope.

Best players were Debbie Clemens '77 (Collegeville, Pa.), first in rebounds, second in points, and second in steals; Donna Jones '78 (Little Meadows, Pa.), leading scorer; and captain Bev Hafer '75 (New Columbia, Pa.), leader in steals.

In club sports, the new hockey team tasted a few victories last winter after a long dry spell, and the rugby team rang up its eighth straight winning season, counting both the fall and spring campaigns.

The ruggers were 4-1-1 last fall and 6-2-1 this spring. Their spring season included a highly unusual triple sudden death overtime scoreless tie with Bucknell in the semi-finals of the annual Schaefer Tournament in Bethlehem. After one hour and 45 minutes of battle in wind, rain and mud, the tournament director halted play. Neither the Bucknell nor Susquehanna sides felt up to another contest so Bethlehem, winner of the other semi-final, was declared the champion by default. Bucknell won a coin-toss with Susquehanna for possession of the second place trophy, and Bison players proceeded to claim a 3-0 victory in the Lewisburg newspaper. While Susquehanna victories over Bucknell in official inter-collegiate sports are rare, the S.U. Rugby Club has a 3-1-2 mark against B.U. over the past two years.

Top scorers for the ruggers were forward Tony Plastino '76 of Lancaster, Pa., and back Kent Houser '76 of Lewistown, Pa., each with 16 points. Plastino led the club in tries with four. Houser was the captain.

The hockey club, coached by assistant professor of mathematics Jim Handlan, compiled at 3-9 record against teams from the Sunbury Ice Hockey League. Next winter the Susquehanna team will be an official member of the league, which includes clubs from Bucknell, Juniata and other area colleges as well as town teams. Top scorers were Doug Miller '77 (Bel Air, Md.), Bill Fortune '76 (Timonium, Md), and John Fiske '78 (Rumson, N.J.).

Glenn "Ernie" Stoudt '76 of Reading, Pa., has the distinction of being the only student at Susquehanna to be a member of both club sport teams.

* * *

Joe Prekopa, co-captain of both the basketball and baseball teams, received this year's Blair Heaton Memorial Award as the senior man "best typifying the devotion to scholarship and athletics and the self-discipline and courage shown on the playing field by the late Blair L. Heaton '42." An accounting major, Prekopa had a 2.90 grade average and was a dormitory head resident.

Admissions Itinerary

SUSQUEHANNA'S Admissions Office personnel cover a lot of territory in recruiting each year's freshman class and filling it with the kind of students who want and will most likely benefit from the education offered at your alma mater. They have released the schedules listed below so you'll know when they are in your area.

To make contact for your own children or for friends, call the Admissions Office at (717) 374-2345 or write before the visit. Or, of course, simply stop by at the location of a College Fair or College Night. These people wish to serve you and in doing so, serve Susquehanna. They welcome contacts with you, whether on campus or in the field.

The staff consists of Paul W. Beardslee, director; James M. Skinner '64, associate director; and two new assistant directors, William C. Heyman and Nora S. Williams '74, Dean of students Edward J. Malloy helps to cover some of the College Nights.

No. 4

ON OUR COVER: Susquehannans on the moon? Not really. University geologists have been in the Rocky Mountains and early this summer were in Iceland, but this photo is of a field trip group descending into the Crossman Clay Pit at Parlin, N.J. We sent Pete Silvestri along to take some pictures and tell you about it. The story begins on the next page.

Also, by special request and because it offers freshly-expressed insights into Susquehanna's church-related character, we present the text of the 1975 Commencement Address delivered by Dr. Pauline Tompkins, president of Cedar Crest College. This begins on page 8.

Speaking of church relationships, 100 alumni from the classes of 1940, 1950, 1960 and 1970 were randomly selected by computer to take part in an attitude survey conducted by the Lutheran Church in America among its 18 colleges and universities in the U.S. If you are able, please help us by completing the questionnaire—we appreciate your cooperation sincerely.

TRACING the FRACTURES in New Jersey

ALL SCIENCE STUDENTS spend long hours in the laboratory. But for geology students, the most important "lab" work is done outside the confines of any building, because in a real sense their laboratory is the entire planet earth, from crust to core.

The Geology Department at Susquehanna conducts two major field trips each year, usually over three-day weekends, in addition to several one-day outings.

Last spring a group visited eastern Pennsylvania and New Jersey. Participating were 18 students, faculty members Robert Goodspeed, Frank Fletcher and Richard Lowright, and a representative of the Alumnus who came back with the pictures on these pages and a fine appreciation of the fact that a neophyte can only begin to scratch the surface of the field of geology in a three-day period.

The major obstacle to comprehension for the uninitiated is the scientific terminology. For someone who doesn't know Ordovician from Silurian or Shawangunk from Martinsburg, and thinks a graywacke is a creature from a Tolkein fantasy, understanding three Ph.D.s and a group of highly intelligent college-level geology majors can be very difficult.

The first stop was the Delaware Water Gap, familiar to all who drive on Interstate Route 80 which travels directly through the gap. But how many of the thousands of motorists who pass through this spectacular piece of scenery every day stop to ask how it got there? The S.U. group did.

Geologists, like all scientists, deal in "multiple working hypotheses" rather than absolute answers when dealing with such questions. The Susquehannans considered a number of alternative explanations for this phenomenon. For simplicity's sake, only one is presented here—the one preferred by Dr. Lowright.

The basement bedrock, says Lowright, contains "fractured traces," tiny fractures in the rock which are so small they are invisible to the naked eye but which become major weak points in the rock through the action of physical and chemical weathering. The fractured traces buckle under the weight of the crust above, and a "topographic low" develops, in this case a gap in the mountain range.

Since running water follows the path of least resistance, a stream is likely to flow in such a gap and over a period of millions of years the rushing water will continue to erode and continually enlarge and deepen the gap. This explanation can apply not only to the Delaware Water Gap, through which flows the Delaware River, but also to the gap where the Susquehanna passes by Mount Mahanoy, and all similar formations in the region.

A fascinating thing about fractured traces, says Lowright, is that they occur at certain intervals, thus explaining the equally-spaced gaps in the mountain ridges along routes 35 and 522 near Selinsgrove. He says that intersections of fractured traces can be found from aerial photographs, and are good places to drill water wells, an idea which he says could benefit industry in Snyder County.

Attempting to explain the formation of the water gap constituted only one level of the geologists' inquiry. Also of concern was the formation of the crust itself and the folding action which created the mountain range, even before the formation of the gap. This matter was pursued at several outcrops between the water gap and the Easton area. It was discovered that the mountain-building process below Easton was of a different type than that observed further north, "Alpine" rather than "Appalachian."

Observations were made not only on the large scale of the mountains, but on a small scale to the extent of examining the "texture" of rocks with hand magnifying lenses to observe the size, shape and arrangement of the individual particles or grains. The hand lenses got much use, along with the compasses used to measure the "strike" or directional trend of the rocks and the "dip" or angle of slope.

A geology field trip is not always as "rural" an experience as one might expect. Most of the formations observed on the first day were along highways where sub-surface rocks had been uncovered by road-building. "We owe a lot to the highway department and the railroads," quipped Dr. Fletcher.

Several years ago the geologists used to eat at restaurants and spend the nights in motels on their field trips. Recently they have been saving money by camping out and preparing their own meals. So the group last spring came prepared with sleeping bags and large tents owned by the Geology Department.

However, a long and tiresome search for a suitable campground on Friday night ended in frustration as no less than five different establishments either rejected the group ("Families Only") or were rejected by Dr. Goodspeed as too expensive. At about 1 a.m., after traveling 360 miles since leaving Selinsgrove, the contingent finally found a place to stay—at the home of Goodspeed's mother in Pennington, N.J. So instead of canvas, the troops had a real roof over their heads. The floors were at least as comfortable as ground, and several enjoyed real beds. The kitchen was a little small for cooking breakfast for 22 people, but the only real inconvenience was that caused by such a large group lining up to use one bathroom.

The second day was spent on the New Jersey shoreline studying the geology of the coastal plain. It had rained most of Friday evening, and the sunshine at the beach on Saturday was a welcome change. The switch in weather also provided a lesson in geology, as the students observed how quickly sand dunes "recover" from a storm. Sections of dunes that had been cut and washed out by the previous night's storm were already filling in again with sand.

The Atlantic Highlands Overlook afforded a spectacular view of the New York City skyline and harbor in the distance, and an even better view of Sandy Hook, which is what the group came to see. Sandy Hook is one of the best examples of such a formation that can be seen from the land surface in the entire world, according to Dr. Goodspeed. The group discussed how the prevailing wind direction and action of the waves moves sand along the shoreline, causing the curve on the "hook."

The spot the students seemed to enjoy most was an unlikely candidate for the honor: The Crossman Clay Pit in Parlin, N.J., a wide, deep sand pit, barren and heavily eroded, that could have passed for the surface of the moon except for a few junk trappings like an old lawnmower, abandoned in a spot where there was no grass in sight. Here, in a small stream that wandered through the area, they observed geology in action, and were fascinated by the ripple marks forming in the stream bed, the pebbles being carried along by the water, and the changes in the course of the stream caused by hard material in the bank deflecting the current. "Just like we learned in class!" one student exclaimed. "Did you think we were kidding?" laughed Dr. Lowright.

The final stops on Sunday were to observe glacial deposits in Northern New Jersey, where it was noted that the region owes its fertile soil to silt left on the bed of a glacial lake during the ice age.

Back in Selinsgrove, the Alumnus observer went home to rest while the geologists stayed on campus stowing away their gear until the next outing—including the tents which had never been unpacked.

Your Susquehanna Legacy

by PAULINE TOMPKINS hc'75

Dr. Tompkins, president of Cedar Crest College, is a former political science professor and executive of AAUW. This is her address to Susquehanna's 1975 Commencement, where she received the honorary Litt.D.

PRESIDENT WEBER, members of the Board of Directors, members of the faculty and staff, parents and friends of the Senior Class; and—primarily!—members of the Class of 1975: it is my privilege to share this eventful occasion with you.

Each one of you is a unique human being; each of you will take from your years here, in addition to the experiences you have shared in common, your particular Susquehanna "legacy." How you spend, invest, develop it is peculiarly up to you. But you are already the recipients of a strong heritage, and everyone of us who watches you set forth this day does so with keen and prayerful expectations.

For the few moments I have with you today, let me talk about the legacies of a college or university. Although you and I are products of a different generation and geography, we are joined through our involvement in the great liberal arts tradition. I think perhaps it has some persisting common elements which affect us all, regardless of time and place. In describing them, I do so with the thought that if I could give each of you a graduation gift, it would be an awareness of your Susquehanna legacy.

For simplicity, I divide the legacy into three parts.

The first is an appreciation of the capacity of individuals for greatness, and through this a reaffirmation of man's and woman's potential for growth.

Susquehanna is what it is today because of the vision and life involvement of some very dedicated individuals, starting well over a century ago. In your time, given the relative smallness and intimacy of this university community, I am confident that you have sensed greatness in your midst, among those with whom you have studied and learned. Their light will brighten as the years go by.

The value of this part of the Susquehanna legacy is underscored when we realize the degree to which we frequently tend to underestimate our potential as individuals. In a mass society marked by the impersonalism of technology and by sheer numbers, it is difficult to believe that the efforts of any individual can count for much, or make any real difference. There is a subtle temptation to excuse ourselves from trying. We look to the giants of the past and lament that "they don't make people like that anymore."

The truth is that the "people like that" emerged frequently from the most unlikely situations. We only need recall a Jesus, a Lincoln, a Helen Keller to make the point.

But I am sure you can identify such persons of greatness among living contemporaries, including individuals on this campus. Their importance cannot be overestimated because they are a part of your life at a critical age. The late teens, the college years are crucially significant in the individual's development of self-identity. To be undergoing this process in a place where the vast potential of individuals is demonstrated before one's eyes can be one of the most telling influences on his development. I suggest that a fuller awareness of this influence will be apparent to you in the years ahead. It will give you an increasing certitude about your own worth as a unique human being.

The second part of your legacy will stem from the way the University has prepared you for living. Here too, each of you will realize your full inheritance only much later, and its measure will be determined by the use you make of what was offered you while you were here.

It is traditional to call the college years "the best years of your life." I am not altogether certain what is meant by the phrase. I suspect that to many, looking back nostalgically after the "life is real, life is earnest" experience of the so-called "real" world, the college years seem like a bright, carefree interlude. I suggest that if indeed this is what is meant, it is a tragic commentary on the lives of adults who apparently never really grew up after college. For each of us, as an evolving, maturing human being, the best years of our life ought to be the years we are living now: a moving panorama in which we are quietly, unostentatiously building on all that has gone before. Your education, in retrospect, should contribute substantially to the foundation for this kind of continuing growth. If and to the degree that it does, the years here should have been—up to this point in your lives—the best years of your life.

The college years are times of carefree fun. But they are also times of anguish. Education is frightening people like that came from unlikely situations

because it exposes the mind's illiteracy and poses a potential threat to principles and convictions which have been programmed into us from infancy, if not before. Ignorance, compounded by immaturity, does not take kindly to education. Paradoxically, in self-defense, we are often tempted to resist the mind-opening which education requires. We don't want to "know" the truth because the freedom which truth bestows bears a burden of responsibility we are not ready to embrace.

For the undergraduate, the revelations of knowledge come at a time when the struggle for self-identity is most acute. He cannot mature without knowledge; yet because he lacks maturity the exposure to knowledge can be excruciating. The challenge before him is how to get a balanced perspective on his relation to the rest of the world, on the relative importance of his selfhood in an incredibly complex universe.

I don't know how each of you has tried to cope with this challenge. Hopefully, as you have added to your store of knowledge, you have learned how to evaluate facts, how to work with concepts, how to use your minds—in short, how to think. To this degree you may already have seen yourselves “grow.” You may have acquired an appreciation of the relationship between ignorance and intolerance, fear and dogmatism, love and beauty, truth and humility—through the courses you have taken, but also through observing these relationships in your own mind and behavior.

to know the truth*

Education should have as a primary objective relating each student to the human concerns inherent in the disciplines and subjects studied: otherwise it will have limited use as a preparation for living and the college graduate will go through life as observer rather than participant. This has to be an immensely frustrating life experience; in addition, the world simply can't afford it.

One of the most profound causes for despair in the contemporary world is our sense of inadequacy—even impotence, in responding to the crisis conditions which characterize our civilization. We feel overwhelmed by them because of their magnitude and because they seem to require the invention of new concepts and methods transcending our experience. The unremitting burden of an overpopulated planet in terms of existing life-support systems; the world energy crisis with its particular impact on this country, which for the first time in our history appears to have reached the end of its last frontier; the muted threat of nuclear annihilation—here are three dramatic illustrations of the plight of mankind. Too encompassing to comprehend, too tragic and too demanding of us in their implications to be willing to confront them, the vast majority pass by in studied aloofness. Only a handful among the world's few billion are about the task of responding.

It is my conviction that the responses you make to the crises and challenges which will confront you will be shaped in large part by the degree to which this institution has in truth prepared you for living. If your encounter with knowledge has been thought-provoking as well as fact-learning, it will enable you in the course of your life and experience to perceive contemporary issues with a sense of proportion. Instead of the dramatic overreaction of the underdeveloped intellect, which pronounces each crisis unique and unprecedented—you will be able to discern historical parallels in certain of the situations confronting you, and thus to bring a more tempered and a wiser response. You will recognize that to other peoples and other times, their crises and dilemmas seemed unique. If you have studied the 14th Century, for example, you will have experienced vicariously one of the worst epochs in European history when the continent was beset with famine, war, and the bubonic plague—which killed about one-third of the entire population of Europe and was the most lethal episode known to history. In the words of historian Barbara Tuchman, there came an “epidemic of violence, depopulation, bad government, oppressive taxes, . . . working class insurrection, monetary crisis, decline of morals and rise in crime, decay of chivalry (we, today, would translate chivalry as ‘civility’), and above all, corruption of society's central institution, the Church, whose loss of authority and prestige deprived man of his accustomed guide in a darkening world.”

One could argue that it must have been far more difficult for men to surmount the evils of the 14th Century than for us to respond to today's crises. Given the absence of widescale education, the lack of knowledge about the past, the primitive state of technology and communication, and the seeming collapse of religious authority—one can only wonder that man made it at a reverence for life

the doom factor generates a coping mechanism

all. And yet the moral of the tribulations of the 14th Century—a universal moral actually—is that “the doom factor (again quoting Miss Tuchman) sooner or later generates a coping mechanism.” Or, in Professor Toynbee’s words, “challenge and response.”

“Dead” history—the recitation of facts—simply notes that Europe survived the 14th Century. “Living” history explores the reasons why Europe survived. The why involves human beings—what made them respond or give up; turned them into saints or demons. “Living” history does more than this however: it relates you, the individual student, to those European ancestors so that you grow through the conscious act of identifying with them in their sometimes pragmatic, sometimes blind, sometimes moral and philosophical responses to the challenges and catastrophes of their time.

If one moves from history to science, art, literature—the same sort of relevance applies. You become involved as a unique, discreet human being. A connection is made. And education as preparation for living is the result.

The last part of the legacy is a recognition of the sanctity, the holiness if you will, of life. It develops through the college years from an education which highlights both the mystery and majesty of life. Susquehanna is one of a relatively small number of universities which is church-related. The ambiguousness of that phrase is painfully evident in contemporary society, where far too often the educator hides the light of his Christian commitment under a barrel of secular jargon. There are some church-related institutions where this tendency is resisted, not by a narrow, mind-closing religious parochialism, but by a positive, mind-and-soul-stretching effort to combine a growth in learning with growth in the Christian faith. This effort is a response in part to the proven inadequacy of education which regards values solely in relative terms and ignores the search for the sanctions which give them validity. At the time of the Nuremberg trials, Justice Robert Jackson noted the chilling paradox that “modern society needs to fear . . . only the educated man. . . . the most serious crimes against civilization can be committed only by educated and technically competent people.”

The attempt to combine growth in learning with growth in the Christian faith has also a more fundamental, positive rationale: it should lead inward to a recognition of man’s relation to a higher power and to his destiny as a child of God; and outward to a perception of the universe transcending the ephemeral and material, imbuing it with eternal relevance. With such perspectives the educated man and woman can attain their God-given potential, and become fit instruments in the fulfillment of the divine plan.

Alfred North Whitehead reminds us that education should afford “the habitual vision of greatness.” Our capacity for developing this vision is ultimately shaped by our conception of man. And the loftiest conception is one rooted in faith in the spiritual essence of man.

The religious dimension in a church-related institution at its highest is inseparable from the spirit of the university. It does not require a particular curriculum. And beyond the formal educational program, it finds expression through “witnessing.” The individual student sees the witnessing through the eye of the spirit in the characters of those who teach him, and in the values their lives reveal. Looking back to my undergraduate years I can recall the names of adults who affected me spiritually. In retrospect, I have added others to the list, whose influence I felt only later when I was more ready to receive it. There weren’t many; there don’t have to be. “Where two or three are gathered together” the spirit—God—is truly in the midst of them, and the results in the lives of those they touch are incalculable.

There is an intimacy on our smaller campuses, a potential for achieving what the Quakers call “a blessed community.” To see the divine in the commonplace, to respond with awe to the magic of creation, to develop a reverence for life and a respect for every other human being—this is the priceless spiritual legacy which education at its best can bestow. As you go forth from this university, this is the legacy I covet most for you.

And now you are ready to “commence”; to begin the next chapter in the venture of living. I hope Susquehanna has prepared you well for it. The universe is both frightening and exciting; the challenges wherever you are will be exhausting and inspiring. I hope you will never stop growing and wondering, either through conceit or despair. I hope you will keep pushing on, in the intuitive knowledge that life is a journey, not a harbor, and in the sublime conviction that a Divine hand is at the helm.

Dr. Luke H. Rhoads retires in October after 25 years as head of the Allegheny Lutheran Homes in Johnstown and Hollidaysburg, Pa. and Lutheran Social Services of the Allegheny Region.

Mary Potter Copp retired after 26 years as head librarian of Jersey Shore (Pa.) H.S. and Public Library. She lives at 169 Kendall Ave., Jersey Shore.

Edith Frankenfield Cramer retired from teaching in the Philadelphia schools. She expects to do part-time office work after settling in her new apartment at 5555 Wissahickon Ave., Apt. 418, Philadelphia, Pa. 19144. Mrs. G. Morris Smith, widow of Susquehanna's 10th president, is living with her.

'35

John P. Maguire wrote a fascinating letter to his reunion class chairman John F. Hanna expressing regrets that he could not be back at S.U. for Alumni Day. Chief of all U.S. Army ports in Japan, he has been in that country ever since leaving the Navy as a Commander in 1947 to join General MacArthur's staff as a civilian. Flyer, golfer, fisherman, athletic official and art collector, he leads a most active life. Address: Chief of Water Terminals, Directorate of Transportation, U.S. Army

Garrison, Honshu, FPO Seattle 98760.

James W. Stirling retired as music teacher in the Hazleton (Pa.) schools. He did graduate work at Penn State and N.Y.U. and sang professionally in New York City.

'40

Virginia Mann Wolvern retired after 35 years as director of the Yonkers (N.Y.) Public Library. Starting as a summer intern, she spent her entire professional career in Yonkers.

Harold R. Snyder has been appointed executive director of United Cerebral Palsy of Pennsylvania. He previously served as director of Travelers Aid International Social Services in New York and is a former pastor of Trinity Lutheran Church, Harrisburg. His son is Jeff Snyder '78.

Ruth Cochrane Surplus is a school psychologist in the Clifton (N.Y.) public schools. She lives at 198A Pompton Ave., Cedar Grove, N.J. 07009.

Dr. Arthur Gelnett, Milton (Pa.) dentist, continues his interest in theatre and recently played a lead in the Milton Rotary production of "You Can't Take It With You."

Nancy Myers Landis of 1315 Clayton Rd., Lancaster, Pa. 17603, is associate buyer of handbags and luggage for Hagers Department Store in Lancaster.

Dr. Donald R. Bashore, associate professor of psychology at Bloomsburg State College, delivered the 1975 commencement addresses at SUNY Agricultural & Technical College at Morrisville, N.Y., the high school in Punxsutawney, Pa., and Wyoming Seminary, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Harriet Gould Mertz, educational IV/AV media specialist, South Miami (Fla.) Sr. H.S., was a participant of the 7th annual summer Asian seminar to Taiwan, Republic of China. Hosts were the National Chenghi University and the Chiang Youth Corps who served as guides, interpreters, and friends. Harriet is president of the University of Miami School of Music Alumni Association and the first woman secretary of Phi Delta Kappa professional education fraternity.

Dr. Harry Bobonich is acting dean of the Graduate School, Shippensburg State College. He recently completed a book manuscript on nutrition.

N-O-S-T-A-L-G-I-A

How long has it been since you—
 Heard a clock ticking,
 Heard a new born baby cry,
 Heard a whippoorwill,
 Tasted a chestnut,
 Said to someone "I love you,"
 Felt like humming a tune,
 Had a dinner of frog legs,
 Said to someone "I'll help you,"
 Took a good look at a full moon,
 Made a popgun out of an elder stalk,
 Had buckwheat cakes and sausage for breakfast,
 Splashed your bare feet in a cool mountain stream,
 Ate a piece of home-made bread,
 Heard a church bell ring,
 Said "Thank you Lord," Visited a sick friend,
 Said "I'm sorry,"
 Said, "Please,"
 Saw a groundhog in a meadow,
 Smelled new mown hay,
 Had your blood pressure taken,
 Heard a blacksmith's hammer on the anvil,
 Have seen a bed bug,
 Heard a train whistle in the night,
 Have been to a Sunday School picnic,
 Saw a humming bird,
 Had a bouquet of sweet peas,
 Heard a rooster crow.

Laughed out loud,
 Heard an eagle scream,
 Made "home made" taffy,
 Cuddled a puppy in your arms,
 Heard sleigh bells ringing,
 Were stung by a bumble bee,
 Heard a hoot owl,
 Had a piece of fresh peach pie,
 Had a tooth ache,
 Heard someone snore,
 Got a splinter in your finger,
 Saw a five dollar bill on the offering plate,
 Went horseback riding,
 Said "Let's stay home tonight,"
 Smelled pickalilly cooking,
 Picked wild huckleberries,
 Heard wild geese honking,
 Filled the cookie jar,
 Said "Come over for Sunday dinner,"
 Tipped the paper boy,
 Kissed your nurse,
 Helped wash the dishes,
 Said "You're a good girl,"
 Felt like running away from home,
 Bought something silly?

(The brain child of my 80th birthday)

AMOS ALONZO STAGG SR., as every reader of this column should know, concluded one of the longest and most illustrious coaching careers in the history of college football with six seasons at Susquehanna, 1947-52, as co-coach of the Crusaders with his son A.A. Stagg Jr.

In the NCAA College Football Modern Record Book, Stagg is listed first in all-time coaching victories with 314. And that total, the NCAA office says, doesn't even include his 21 victories at S.U. because of the co-coaching arrangement. The Staggs' 1951 team was undefeated and offensive center Jim Hazlett was named a Little All-American. Hazlett is now entering his 10th year as head football coach at S.U.

Two years ago the NCAA established a national football championship playoff series for Division III (small colleges), culminating in the Amos Alonzo Stagg Bowl, named in honor of the Grand Old Man. Juniata College, our long-time rival, played in the first Stagg Bowl, losing to Wittenberg. In last year's Division III national championship, Central College of Iowa defeated Ithaca. The game is played each year in Phenix City, Alabama.

All this is not meant as a history and geography lesson, but as a circuitous way of suggesting that there is no limit to the potential of the 1975 Crusader football team. While predicting a national championship would be a bit foolhardy, we can at least enjoy the luxury of thinking about the possibility of earning selection for the post-season title playoffs, which this year will be expanded from a four- to an eight-team format. And it certainly would be fitting for S.U. to play in the bowl game that bears the name of the famous former Crusader coach.

Susquehanna achieved its first undefeated football campaign in 1932, and has had at least one in each decade since, through the 1960s. How about one for the 1970s? The coaching staff and players believe a 9-0 mark is a realistic goal, and a look at the material bears out that confidence.

The Crusaders have 29 returning lettermen. A lot of other teams can boast a comparable figure, but not many can match the Crusader total of 18 players who have already won letters in two or more seasons.

Hazlett says the offensive line is the best he's had. Tackle Gerry Huesken '77 (Palmyra, N.J.) and guard Mike Monahan '77 (Rockville, Md.) are among the best around. The backfield of Tim Lawlor '77 (Shillington, Pa.), Jim Camut '77 (Johnston, Pa.) and Paul O'Neill '78 (Stratford, N.J.) is good and can be better. None of our opponents has a receiver to match split end Jeff Steltz '76 (Wyomissing, Pa.). No foe will find it easy to score against the Crusader defense, anchored by tackle Pat Lowe '76 (Johnson City, N.Y.) and middle linebacker Joe LoCastro '76 (Barrington, N.J.).

The only question mark is at the quarterback spot left vacant by Mike Buterbaugh '75, who set a school season record last fall with 92 pass completions. But even this problem could evaporate quickly if John Bird '76 (Bloomsburg, Pa.) can stay healthy or if one of several highly regarded freshman prospects works out. The crucial factor here is one of leadership. Buterbaugh was well liked by the other players and this helped him run the offense. Hopefully the returning veterans have the maturity to learn to work with a new man.

The Crusaders also lost, through graduation, record-setting placekicker and defensive end Chuck Smeltz, offensive tackle Bob Brett, safety Pete Rambo, and linebacker Mike Kennedy. But there is so much talent returning that they should not be missed seriously.

The players know they are a better team than last year's 4-5-1 record indicates, and they want to prove it. Coach Hazlett would like to make his 10th season at S.U. his best so far.

The season opens at home on September 13 with the Crusaders entertaining Grove City in the 16th Annual Sunbury Kiwanis Charities—Stagg Hat Trophy game. It will mark the sixth straight year S.U. has opened with Grove City. Susquehanna had to settle for a 14-14 tie with the Wolverines last year after scoring four straight wins.

This year's Homecoming game on October 4 will be an important Middle Atlantic Conference contest against Lycoming. The Warriors expect to be stronger than the group that lost 30-18 to the Crusaders last year.

Albright, which should be a contender for the MAC Northern Division title along with defending champ Wilkes, Juniata and S.U., will provide the opposition on Parents Day, October 18. The Crusaders resumed their series with the Lions last year after a 50-year lapse and dropped a close 14-9 decision.

The season concludes on November 8 with a home game against Waynesburg, which nipped S.U. 11-10 in 1974 on a last-minute field goal.

Successful campaigns also appear forthcoming for the soccer, cross country and field hockey teams.

The booters could use a little help on defense, but expect to score a lot of goals with the entire line returning from a team that tied the school record for goals in one season last fall with 28. Key returnees are lineman Kurt Kohler '76 (Grosse Pointe Woods, Mich.) and coach Neil Potter, back after a year's sabbatical leave.

The cross country team has everybody back and hopes to avoid the injuries that thinned the ranks last year. Ace runner Jeff Yoder '76 (Mt. Carmel, Pa.) was hurt last fall, but was healthy enough in the spring to break his own school record in the mile.

The field hockey team hopes to make victory a habit after scoring the first winning season since 1962 last year. Leading returnee is high scoring Leslie Beers '76 (Springfield, Pa.).

ON OUR COVER: Gathering around President Weber are these sons and daughters of Susquehanna alumni who enrolled in the class of 1979 (clockwise): Holly Maier (Esther Seiting Maier '41), White Haven, Pa.; Ruth Kimmel (George J. '38 and Dorothy Shutt Kimmel '40), Ashland, Pa.; Mary Knapp (Albert C. Knapp '42), Odenton, Md.; Michael Smith (Lawrence M. Smith '49), Freeburg, Pa.; Richard Brown (Jack A. Brown '51), Masking Ridge, N.J.; Bruce Torok (Steven F. '53 and Joyce Wagner Torok '53), Southampton, Pa.; Elizabeth Sheldon (Donald R. Sheldon '53), Silver Spring, Md. Others not present for the photographer are Steven Arbogast (Ned M. Arbogast '54), Hollywood, Pa., and Jesse Shutt (William C. Shutt '60), Collegeville, Pa. Also enrolled are 34 young people who have other relatives among University alumni! This speaks well indeed for what our alumni think of their education at Susquehanna. While statistics show that today's college students to a large extent make their own choices about what college they attend, they also show that parents' opinions weigh next most heavily.

The Report of the President is the feature of this issue. It was prepared with the help of Homer W. Wieder, vice president for development. It includes not merely a lot of facts of interest to alumni, but also a great deal of thoughtfully-expressed philosophy about what's going on at Susquehanna these days, and why. If you have not been reading the annual President's Report, this is a good year to start doing so.

As most of our readers know, Susquehanna is related to the Lutheran Church in America, through the Central Pennsylvania Synod. In the United States, many colleges were founded by church bodies; several hundred still regard themselves as related to these bodies, although the definition of church-relatedness seems to defy standardization. In our case, the college is not owned by the church—the Synod does elect eight members (four clergy and four lay) to our board of Directors of between 40 and 50 members. In attempting to define their church relationship (which differs vastly across the land) all 18 LCA colleges in the U.S. adopted covenants with their supporting synods several years ago. Ours is summarized in "The Covenants" beginning on page 27. This, too, is pertinent reading for those who would know what Susquehanna is about.

Report of the President

introduction

1974-75

THIS YEAR'S President's Report will depart somewhat from previous years and highlight some of the events of the past academic year. In addition, I want to use this space to look forward to the next several years and to the changes which are in progress on the campus. It is quite unusual for a college president to be optimistic in this day and age, but I can report to alumni and friends with deep conviction that Susquehanna is stronger today than at any time during my tenure. Our operating budget of $6 million remains in balance; our faculty is stronger and more active than ever before; and, contrary to the condition of many sister institutions, our applications for admission experienced some increase over last year. We anticipate perhaps the largest enrollment in our history this fall.

American higher education has faced its greatest crisis in recent years. From the student unrest of the late 1960s and early 1970s over Vietnam and the relevance of post-secondary education in a declining job market to the current inflationary pressure which has threatened to change both the nature and character of many institutions—Susquehanna has faced these conditions head on, and it is my considered judgment that, these external forces notwithstanding, this University is a better and more viable institution today than at any time in its long and prominent history.

President Gustave W. Weber at this year's gathering of freshmen and their parents. At Susquehanna since February 1, 1959, his administration is the third longest in the University's 117 years, exceeded only by those of Dr. G. Morris Smith (1928-59) and Dr. Charles T. Aikens (1905-27).

Although the pressures cited above give pause for concern and place additional demands on faculty and staff to rethink traditional and cherished ways of doing things, a far greater threat to higher education and to society rests in the need for use to reaffirm the moral commitment on which this great land's heritage is based. While Vietnam and inflation have been serious problems, the undercutting of this country's moral fiber by supposedly intelligent government leaders and businessmen is of greater long range significance. Watergate was perhaps only symptomatic of an even deeper disregard for the values of our society, just as the recent disclosures of questionable business practices and political payments, both foreign and domestic, tend to jeopardize the free enterprise system. One would not be as concerned if many of those involved were not leaders in our political and business communities. One would also be more inclined to rationalize such actions if many involved were not the products of our better educational institutions. The end result can only further weaken public confidence in American political and business establishments and, if allowed to continue, could in the end be the demise of the free enterprise system—and even freedom itself. Much of the responsibility for correcting this moral deficiency and lapse in our society must rest with the system of higher education. We are looked to to provide society with leaders possessing an ability to differentiate between what is acceptable and unacceptable, between what is to be valued and what is to be questioned, and to inculcate in students a grasp of the moral and ethical consequences of their actions that will permit them to avoid the kind of national crisis we have just experienced and are still experiencing. It is my contention that a liberal arts-oriented, church-related college is especially equipped to carry out this mission.

Each year students come to Susquehanna with the expectation of developing a better understanding of the complex issues and problems with which they are confronted with increasing frequency. The contradictory and complex nature of these problems requires solutions and decisions based on a variety of choices, among often conflicting priorities. The ability to decide among various options determines whether or not the technology we have created and shall create will be our master. Our grasp of the moral and ethical consequences of our actions is the strength we need to help us avoid debilitating national crises. We have learned the hard way that pure professional competence is a house of sand if it is accompanied by moral callousness. This awareness of a "completeness" which is necessary in higher education attests to the need for and the value of a liberal arts-oriented curriculum. And in continuing to believe in career orientation taught within the framework of a liberal education, the University acknowledges that there is more to living than merely earning a living.

The basic and overriding question to be asked is: "To what degree do Susquehanna-graduated students meet standards of quality and integrity?" Evaluation of professional preparation can be made without much difficulty and, in Susquehanna's case, this has been found to be most satisfactory as measured by traditional yardsticks. To what degree pure professional competence is balanced with an understanding of the totality of man's experience and a sense of ethics and morality is much more difficult to answer. This speaks directly to the character of the institution.

As such, Susquehanna serves a unique role in American society. Through tradition and design, Susquehanna inculcates in students that man does not live by technology and material comfort alone. The University combines with other vital forces in society—family, church and community—to produce citizens of informed and well disciplined intelligence capable of making sound ethical and moral judgments in a complex world.

The liberal arts, as a basis for all education, have shown themselves to be capable of withstanding the test of time and of integrating and assimilating those elements of continuity and change that are worthwhile. To quote from John Stuart Mill: "Men are men before they are lawyers, or physicians, or merchants, or manufacturers; and if you make them capable and sensible men, they will make themselves capable and sensible lawyers and physicians."

As a church-related college, Susquehanna is capable of graduating responsible individuals who exhibit through their personal lives and public actions an understanding for the social, political and moral consequences involved. The church-related school has the greatest capability of placing the Church at the center of the institution's life and activity and of overcoming the present day tendency to value neutrality. More than any other institution, the church-related liberal arts college can best help society arrest the disintegration of its value system and meet the challenge from both secularization and excessive specialization. Susquehanna realizes that most times this goal is achieved imperfectly and even accidentally. While such an admission must give us reason to pause and to reexamine our academic programs and commitment to serious and effective teaching in the classroom, we should not apologize for the objectives themselves. Instead, these reasons for continued commitment to mission must be restated with emphasis. In addition, we must continue to have the will to carry out the goals both of liberal education and of our particular constituency in order to have the chance to survive the pressures of the contemporary scene.

THE UNIVERSITY'S ABILITY to attract students continues to remain stable, in spite of national trends which depict some erosion of enrollments at the private colleges. Surveys indicate that fewer than half of the private colleges and universities had enrollment increases last fall. It would seem that Susquehanna's ability to attract and retain a full complement of students results from several important factors including: a broader acceptance of the University's academic reputation among graduating high school students and their guidance counselors; the University's determination to keep costs moderate and within reach of potential students from various socio-economic backgrounds; the addition of a fourth member to the Admissions staff. Of overriding importance, however, is the academic reputation which Susquehanna has developed in recent years along with our ability to offer the type of educational experience popular among a growing number of prospective students.

As of this writing in mid-summer, the University has processed over 1185 applications for admission for the fall of 1975. This represents about a five percent increase over last year. We expect a freshman class of 400 to enroll and we further expect the total enrollment of the University to again exceed 1400. The Admissions Office visited over 300 high schools during the past year and this effort reflects itself in the geographical distribution of the student body. Students in the incoming freshman class will again represent about 15 states and several foreign countries. This pleases us, since geographical spread helps provide a more enlightened educational atmosphere on campus.

Inflationary pressures continue to deal a severe blow to many colleges as they fight to retain a cost-competitiveness. Although Susquehanna has raised its cost by about $300 for the next year and tuition will be $2500 annually, we still rank twelfth among 16 competing colleges in terms of costs. We are doing all that we can to remain within the reach of all students from all economic backgrounds. Several months ago the parents of 733 Susquehanna students received a questionnaire from students conducting a marketing survey for a project in a business course. Information was sought on how these parents perceived the quality and cost of Susquehanna University versus other competing schools. Based on 335 anonymous responses, the median family income of Susquehanna parents was $23,000. This is well above the median family income in the United States. A family income of $15,000-$25,000 is considered upper middle class. In one sense, these figures are disturbing, since they may be interpreted to mean that only the more affluent can afford to attend the University. On the other hand, our own analysis shows that over 60 percent of our students attend Susquehanna with some form of financial aid. We also know that a significant number of our students come from families with incomes of under $12,000. A top priority must be given to retaining this diversity of income groups within the student body. Not only is geographical spread preferable, but the benefits of students from all walks of life and socio-economic backgrounds living and working together brings a cosmopolitan flavor to campus which is highly desirable. We will, therefore, place great emphasis on expanding sources of financial aid available to all students.

Each year the Admissions Office asks our incoming freshmen to fill out a form indicating those factors believed to have influenced their selection of Susquehanna as their college. Ranking high in terms of importance were the academic reputation of the college in general and the reputation of their specific field of interest in particular; the size of the school and the location of Susquehanna in proximity to their home. We also ask them to what other colleges they made application, and among the schools most prominently listed were Bucknell, Gettysburg, Grove City, Lycoming, Muhlenberg and Penn State.

A major factor throughout the country is the declining scores of students on the College Board tests. Each year the national averages deteriorate from 8 to 15 points. Between 1967 and 1974, the number of high school juniors and seniors scoring above 700 on the verbal SAT test fell by half—down from approximately 32,000 in 1967. The number of students scoring above 600 fell by a third. Susquehanna has experienced these normal drops among its candidates for admission, although almost 80 percent of those offered admission continue to come from the upper two-fifths of their graduating secondary school classes. Whether the trend in declining SAT scores will continue and what has caused it thus far remain unanswered questions. One theory is that the tests have become more difficult; another is that there are more students now taking the tests. Neither theory seems to satisfy the experts. A conclusion might be that there has been a decline in the developed reasoning ability of students as measured by the SATs. This could point to a declining emphasis on verbal and reading skills at pre-college levels. In any event, the decline in reading and writing abilities of incoming students poses a particular problem for all colleges that is nationwide in scope.

Susquehanna has decided to attack this matter of declining literacy head-on. We know that our students are well motivated and that some begin college at a distinct advantage, particularly if they are proficient in reading and writing. We know, too, that even those with deficiencies can be brought to a sufficient level of competency by special programs during the freshman year—programs that stress grammar, thought analysis, and the ability to read and write critically. We have initiated such programs for our students, even though Susquehanna's average SAT scores of 480 (men) and 510 (women) are well above average. We are convinced that a solid grounding in fundamentals will enable our students to improve their proficiency and do better work at the junior and senior levels. This can only lead to a better educational experience for all students.

Each year, an Orientation Committee of upperclass men and women comes back to campus a week early to be on hand when freshmen arrive—to move them and their belongings into dormitories, indoctrinate them about campus life, see to it that they are assigned mailboxes and meet the laundry people, and help administer a battery of placement tests.

THE ATTEMPT TO GIVE a broad and all-inclusive description of a "student body" could, at one time, be accomplished with a degree of certainty. Today, however, we can no longer consider the student body a homogeneous group with like characteristics and aspirations. Granted, there is still the traditional majority of 17- to 21-year-olds who dominate campus life, but even their goals and aspirations are more individualistic in nature than a few years ago. There are other constituencies on campus—groups of students who are older and who tend to drop in and out of college while pursuing an education and holding down a fulltime job, and others with the more limited educational objective of achieving added status in employment or in their personal lives. The college campus today is providing more ways for a greater number of students to pursue educational opportunities. In addition to Susquehanna's daytime undergraduate program, the University has forcefully made an impact in the region by offering a wide range of evening and adult education courses for more than 250 area residents. An Associate degree program with a major in the arts or in applied science (business) now enrolls about 40 and offers another dimension to Susquehanna's goal of providing for the educational needs of the region. This diversity of goals and interests of students has, I am convinced, made Susquehanna a more viable educational institution. To be able to award a grandmother her undergraduate degree in music, to offer Certificates in Management through the evening program to shop foremen and supervisors so that they might be promoted to higher managerial positions, and to see the housewife with four youngsters return to college to pursue studies of special interest to her—these are the satisfactions in higher education today as more of our citizens consider education a lifelong process and not simply confined to a certain term or to a given number of courses.

Our major effort, of course, continues to focus on the needs of our fulltime undergraduate enrollment of 1400. As I have indicated in earlier reports, the role of the student personnel office continues to evolve in such a way as to meet changing student needs. The dissolution of the in loco parentis role of colleges which emphasized the custodial and disciplinary duties of a dean of students has been replaced by greater emphasis on counseling and advising. In this sense, the student personnel role complements the academic function in that individual student problems often encompass decisions influencing career and professional plans.

The University has always tried to emphasize to students the value of a liberal arts education as the most effective preparation for life. Regardless of professional or vocational interests of students, the liberal arts base provides a solid foundation for specialized concentration in a major field of interest. During the past several years the emphasis in the media about a scarcity of teaching positions and other occupational specialties for which the liberal arts major has traditionally trained has raised the question in the minds of many students: "What does one do with a liberal arts education?" The more vocationally trained undergraduates—those in music, business, accounting and the sciences—have, to this point, not been subjected to the severe pressures of the more broadly educated liberal arts majors. We would hope that the recovery of the economy will reverse this inequity, but even over the long haul indications are that the number of college graduates in the next few years will exceed the number of jobs requiring their skills by about 800,000. Susquehanna and its Placement Office have had good success in placing students, in spite of the downward trend of the economy in recent years. There are steps being taken on campus which will make the Susquehanna graduate even more competitive in the marketplace.

Career Conferences are held annually with special emphasis on attracting students in the lower classes, although members of all classes do attend the sessions. The objective is to make all students aware of the need to plan for their future careers. An additional major step we have in mind is the introduction of a course in "career planning." Information on vocational and professional areas, students' interests and aptitudes will be studied as the student keeps his own goals in focus. Thus, a student inclined toward history may be made aware of the many areas in which historians are employed, or encouraged to seek some elective business courses to make the educational background more attractive to employers.

In extreme cases, changing the academic area of interest may be desired, since a student's professional goal may demand other preparation. For some students the course will merely be affirmation of their original career goals.

The University does not overemphasize career preparation, but we are convinced that a liberal arts base in combination with career preparation can serve as an adequate education for many students. The future holds more leisure time for all of us. Experts tell us that many jobs will become less rewarding as technological advances consume more and more of the challenge of the various occupations. As a result, there is an even greater urgency that the employee of tomorrow be broadly educated to find increasing satisfaction from his leisure time pursuits and from his involvement in non-occupational activities. Boredom, we are told, will become an even greater concern to society as the years pass. In this sense, then, those grounded in the liberal arts with broad-based interests will be best equipped to cope with the changing nature of our society.

Several significant changes in other areas of student life should be noted. The trend of students to live off-campus, which we witnessed during the early part of this decade, has reversed itself. We now find our housing under severe pressure and overcrowded as more of our students desire to live on campus. This reversal results from the increasing cost of off-campus living as well as from an easing of social restrictions within our housing units on campus.

A more equal distribution of financial aid resources for male and female athletes, equal access to facilities and programs and comparable social regulations for both men and women are now mandated by the Federal Government. In the case of Susquehanna, an apparent neglect was the amount of time allocated to our women in Alumni Gymnasium for their participation in intramural and intercollegiate activities. Space precluded an equitable distribution of time for a program that was overwhelmingly in favor of the men. This condition will be corrected with the erection of the new physical education building and with greater emphasis on our women's sports programs.

A final point about the physical education building should be made. The physical, spiritual and intellectual needs of our students are so interrelated that a deficiency in any one of these areas tends to inhibit the development of the total person. The need for a modern and functional physical education facility may be viewed with the same urgency and importance to our liberal arts philosophy as any other major building on the campus. With its completion in the fall of 1976, we will be able to emphasize the development of the body, stress lifelong sports, and complete the physical evolution of the campus which began with the erection of Heilman Hall in 1958.

I continue to marvel at the quality of Susquehanna's students and their maturity. We believe that the educational opportunities available to these students equal those of our competitors. Our graduates confirm this faith as more and more of them leave Selingsgrove and make their mark in a chosen profession.

MUCH TALK IN THE MEDIA today would lead one to suspect that the American dream might be dead and, if not, at least in critical condition. Frequently enough to be a bit annoying, I have heard members of my generation say, "I think children born 50 years ago could look forward to a better future than my children can." Much of the talk centered around the type of world and the caliber of society their sons and daughters would inhabit. This put-down of America has become common among groups of supposedly learned people. It seems fashionable to criticize, throw up our hands in despair and rationalize that those problems we face are of such proportion that solutions are improbable. I would concur with Thomas Griffith, who writes in a recent Bicenennial issue of Fortune: "... yet, the despair seems to be premature. A persuasive case can be made that if the American dream is dead, or dormant, it is because the dream of the fathers has been mostly realized, while the dream of the sons has not yet been successfully formulated." Griffith also points out that dreams achieved become mundane. The achievements bring new problems. Are these sons prepared to formulate new dreams?

American education can look back on a decade of unparalleled growth and achievement. Students were in abundance and an element of the American dream—making higher education within the reach of all—took a giant step closer to reality. We became enamored with our own success to the point of becoming somewhat complacent about the real role and limits of education. Education, it was emphasized, was a sure cure and had solutions to all problems facing the world. As we entered the late '60s and early '70s our security was shattered by the unrest of students dissatisfied with social and world issues certainly, but also evidencing a major disenchantment with the higher educational system itself. The smugness and self assurance which typified the college faculty member and administrator of the previous decade gave way to doubt and an uncertainty of purpose. Many institutions acquiesced to student and societal demands for hasty changes in an effort to implement something more "relevant." We temporarily lost sight of the true role of education which teaches values, thought processes and critical analysis through historical perspective while opting for the more modern and temporary expedencies.

These whims, pressures and desires were present on the Susquehanna campus, too, but to a much lesser extent than one would expect. Our goal has always been to emphasize the liberal arts as a necessary focal point for all educational pursuits and, although challenged, it did survive the pressures of those times.

As the recent Middle States evaluation pointed out, if Susquehanna had one major fault it was that it had perhaps remained too traditional during this period. Hindsight tells us that our adherence to the traditional was correct, but that more attention needed to be directed toward integrating into this traditional curriculum new methods of teaching, more opportunities for our students to test their theories and concepts, and greater concern for the integration of academic departments into cross-disciplinary programs in which students could acquire a broader perspective. Perhaps a major portion of the thinking that the American dream is dead results from the two diverse educational axes which have pervaded our institutions in recent years. On the one hand is the technological or super-specialized education thrust upon us by the advent of Sputnik in the late 1950s and carried over to today. At the other extreme is the purely theoretical education of the liberal arts which, if considered alone, often results in disillusionment when the ideal proves unattainable in real life. We should have these worthy ideals and we should first learn to think critically, and this is the value of the liberal arts. But beyond that, we should also have a perspective which associates the ideal with the every day and which tempers thought to the more pragmatic and realistic needs of society and to what can be accomplished in our diverse society. One would say that this is compromise, but I would argue that this represents reality and the basis on which all progress is made.

There is, then, a middle ground on which a college or university can integrate the ideal with the practical and achieve society's desired "educated person." Clifton R. Wharton Jr., president of Michigan State University, said it this way:

General education, concentrating on developing a broad cultural perspective, analytic abilities, and communicative skills, not only enriches our personal and intellectual lives, but enhances our adaptability to new situations, including new job situations. For that reason, I am by no means stretching a point when I say that general education is as indispensable to the world of work as any program of career education or vocational training.

Therefore, I argue for the ascendancy of neither general nor career education. Only a dual approach can serve our purposes—a partnership operating with a context of ongoing educational participation by people of all ages, each involved in the kinds of learning experiences appropriate to whatever circumstances shape the various needs of his or her life. In our future educational strategies, general education and career education must join together, lest either, in standing alone, prove an unfortunate societal liability.

As national discussions on the future of liberal education have progressed, the justification for its continued existence is increasingly recognized. The difficulty lies in the means of converting philosophical goals into specifics. In resolving this problem, we must avoid the luxury of becoming embroiled in debates between the advocates of traditional humanistic education and those who opt for a heavier emphasis on applied learning, because there is neither one answer nor one method which would result in a universally applicable and acceptable solution. We need to agree that all of us are engaged in a common enterprise which proceeds from one broad set of goals that can be implemented in a variety of ways depending on the needs of the individuals and disciplines involved. It is, however, essential to avoid delays in order that we may turn to specific applications through which we can advance the education of our students by translating the institutional goals into an imaginative and contemporary program of learning and scholarship.

There are several priorities which should be kept in mind. First is the need to improve the literacy of those students who arrive on campus deficient in reading and writing skills. Addressing this common problem will result in more productive students better able to grasp the essence of a liberal education. I have referred to this matter earlier and to the ways in which the University is attempting to deal with it. A second priority evolves from the first. We must search for new unity in our Core education program. The Core program is that group or selection of courses which provides a background of breadth and understanding of various disciplines and ensures that, regardless of one's major field of interest, he will be exposed to a variety of subjects. This must be accomplished not through a return to specific requirements, but through common goals and objectives which will be the link for our instruction and course offerings. Revisions should emphasize the interrelatedness of knowledge among various disciplines, as well as conceptual organization. It might involve a Department of General Studies in which faculty from various disciplines come together and offer courses stressing these interrelationships. It might also explore new viewpoints and ideas for fresh approaches to the teaching of liberal education. The National Endowment for the Humanities has awarded Susquehanna funds to secure the services of an outside consultant to study Susquehanna's particular needs in this regard.

Another priority involves faculty development. Faculty will be encouraged to enter into more cross-disciplinary discussions and projects with their colleagues here and elsewhere. Through this process, a real familiarity with changes in and new approaches to particular disciplines should evolve. Associated with the need for broader faculty participation and involvement in new curriculum design is the need for the teacher to become better qualified to advise students in designing their educational experience. As compulsory course requirements become fewer in number and as the student himself takes on more of the responsibility for designing his own educational program, the role of the adviser becomes even more crucial. An immediate aim is to improve our ability to utilize the present curricular offerings more creatively as each student's program is developed.

Several new dimensions have been added to our educational program which allow students to gain more practical experience through field work and to apply their knowledge to real life situations. This "extra dimension" is essential in helping to bridge the gap between the classroom and what exists in the real world. In cooperation with Tressler-Lutheran Service Associates, a large social service agency in Harrisburg, the University has formed the Center For Family Enrichment. The Center coordinates University involvement in the various social and economic issues facing a 15-county region in Central Pennsylvania. Among its functions, the Center supervises student off-campus experiences with social service agencies, juvenile probation offices, homes for the elderly, the Federal Penitentiary in Lewisburg, local day care centers and nursery schools and other related internships and practicums. The Center's outreach into the region is extensive and also includes a family counseling service and a program to assist rural ministers with their needs.

In a similar vein, the Institute For Environmental Studies, now in its fourth year, provides our students with the opportunity to become involved in problems of the environment. Students interested in environmental studies are provided with a series of courses whose purpose is not to train specialists, but to provide each student with a basis for understanding, perceiving and appreciating the interrelationships among environmental issues and particular disciplines. During the junior and senior years each student selects a research course in his own discipline relating to environmental issues.

A new Rural Studies Program combines the resources of eight regional colleges and allows for the interchange of students among institutions so as to provide a breadth of coursework dealing with problems common to rural areas. In addition to Susquehanna, the sponsoring colleges are: Bloomsburg State College, Bucknell University, Lycoming College, Lock Haven State College, Mansfield State College, Pennsylvania State University, Williamsport Area Community College.

Cooperative Education is new to Susquehanna. This concept permits the student to alternate periods of full-time employment with full-time study and receive a bachelor's degree in five years. Providing flexibility for the student wishing practical work-related experience or who must rely on periods of employment to help meet college expenses, the Cooperative Program combines on-campus and off-campus activity to provide greater access to education for more students. The University has received a Federal grant to formulate this program.

The many other internships and off-campus experiences available through the individual academic departments continue to be attractive to our students. One new dimension added this year is an arrangement with the Selinsgrove School District whereby junior education majors serve for a period of time as teacher aides in the local Middle School. These programs give practical application to learning and reinforce career interests.

The quality of the Susquehanna faculty and their accomplishments continues to reflect most favorably on the University. With the start of the 1975-76 academic year, we are pleased to welcome back those who were absent last year. Dr. Neil H. Potter, associate professor of chemistry, returns from a year's leave spent teaching at Tunghai University in Taiwan. Carol J. Harrison, assistant professor of mathematical sciences, returns from a full year's sabbatical, and Dr. Richard Kamber, assistant professor of philosophy and Dr. Lucia S. Keger, associate professor of modern languages, return from absences during the third term.

It was my pleasure to confirm the promotions of seven faculty members to higher rank during the past year in recognition of their outstanding service to the University. Advancing from associate professor to full professor were Dr. Robert M. Bastress in education and Dr. James R. Misanin in psychology. Five staff members received promotion to associate professor: Donald W. Beckie, music; Frank S. Chase, sociology; Richard A. Reiland, accounting; Dr. Robert L. Tyler, mathematics; Dr. Gene R. Urey, political science. At the administrative level, James M. Skinner was elevated to associate director of admissions and Edward J. Malloy, formerly dean of students, now serves as vice president for student affairs.

William O. Roberts, assistant professor of music, retired from the University on June 30. Professor Roberts returned to his alma mater in 1965 and has been the one primarily responsible for the excellent placement record of our graduates in music education. After his long and distinguished career in public school service, it was Susquehanna's good fortune to secure the services of Professor Roberts over the past ten years. Also retiring in June was Hilda Karniol, instructor in art. Mrs. Karniol, a resident of Sunbury, has served the University well since 1959 and her influence will remain through the numerous paintings she has periodically donated to Susquehanna and which are now on display throughout the campus.

It is always pleasant to welcome new members of the academic community to Susquehanna. Joel Behrens will replace Mr. Roberts in the Music Department. He will assume the rank of instructor in music and supervisor of the student teaching program in music. He is a specialist in woodwinds and holds a master's degree in music from the University of Michigan. William G. Krieger, presently completing work on his doctorate at Purdue University, will serve as an instructor in psychology while Dr. Leroy H. Pelton of the department is on leave. To accommodate the increase in enrollment in business, we have added Richard J. Masom to our staff as an assistant professor. Mr. Masom has extensive experience in business and holds an engineering degree from Rutgers University. At the same time, Mrs. Dorothy Masom will replace Mrs. Karniol as a lecturer in art. Mark D. Soskin, the holder of a master's degree from California State University in Sacramento who is presently finishing his doctorate at Penn State, will join Susquehanna as an instructor in economics.

James T. Parks has been appointed as director of the Center For Family Enrichment. A Susquehanna graduate and an ordained Lutheran minister, he will also serve as a lecturer in sociology. For the past several years, Mr. Parks has been associated with the Davis and Elkins College guidance and counseling center in Elkins, West Virginia. Mrs. Nora S. Williams, a graduate of the University, has joined the admissions staff replacing Wendy McMahan, who, along with Mrs. Susan P. Stagers, another member of the staff, have moved to Franklin and Marshall College. Replacing Mrs. Stagers is William C. Heyman, a graduate of Gettysburg College and more recently a member of the admissions staff at the University of Detroit.

Several members of the faculty were granted sabbatical leaves for the current year. Dr. David E. Horlacher, professor of economics, is working for the United Nations on population control in the Far East, while Richard A. Reiland, associate professor of accounting, will study and teach for a year at Bowling Green University in Ohio. Dr. Peter B. Waldeck, associate professor of German, will be on leave during the third term to continue his work on a book. In addition, David J. Oscarson, assistant professor of business, will continue his administrative leave to pursue his doctorate at Virginia Polytechnic Institute.

Over 50 percent of the University's faculty have earned doctorates. This year four additional members received Ph.D.s: Hans E. Feldmann, assistant professor of English, from the University of Maryland; G. Edward Schweikert, assistant professor of psychology, from Kent State University; Gene R. Urey, associate professor of political science, from Syracuse University; James A. Blessing, assistant professor of political science, from SUNY at Albany.

Various members of the faculty were active in scholarly activities. Dr. Kamber presented a paper entitled "The Assertions of Authors in Philosophy and Literature" for the joint Susquehanna-Bucknell Humanities Colloquium. Dr. Thomas F. Livernois gave two lectures, one on "The Theology of Proclamation" at the meeting of Bloomsburg District of the Synod, and a second entitled "Lutheran Theology" before a meeting of Christian educators from a Harrisburg congregation. Dr. Donald D. Housley addressed the Snyder County Historical Society on "Economic Development and Population Change in Snyder County, 1800-1970." Dr. Charles E. Lyle presented two guest lectures on parapsychology at Bloomsburg State College and Zion Lutheran Church in Sunbury.

In the Language and Literature Division, Dr. Elizabeth

Wiley, professor of English, read a paper entitled "Dickens' Italy Revisited" before the Dickens Fellowship in Pittsburgh. Dr. Waldeck delivered a paper on "Anxiety and the Biology of Literature" at the Humanities Colloquium.

The Music Department was active in the presentation of recitals and in the area of conducting. James B. Steffy, head of the Department, was guest conductor for the Virginia Regional Band Festival, the Franklin County Band and the Perry County Band, and was festival director for the Fiesta Musical Mexicana in Mexico City and Oaxtepec. He conducted the Susquehanna Symphonic Band in a concert before the Eastern Division of the Music Educators National Conference in Philadelphia, and also served as adjudicator for band festivals in Pennsylvania and Washington, D.C. Victor P. Rislow conducted the Susquehanna University Jazz Ensemble in several presentations in Pennsylvania high schools. He and Donald W. Beckie are members of the music faculty of the Governor's School for the Arts hosted by Bucknell University during the summer. Cyril M. Stretansky again served as festival director and guest conductor for the Rome Choral Festival held during Easter week. This summer he also served as instructor for a Church Music Seminar in Choral Conducting at College Misericordia in Wilkes-Barre. John D. Zurfluh Jr. was clinician for string instrument repair sessions sponsored by the Texas American String Teacher Association at Austin College. Several members of the music faculty gave recitals on the campus—Galen H. Deibler, Harriet M. Couch, Dr. James L. Boeringer and John P. Magnus. In addition, Messrs. Deibler and Zurfluh, David A. Boltz, and Mrs. Grace Boeringer presented several programs with Mr. Beckie as guest artist. The University was host to a Workshop on Church Music directed by Dr. Boeringer during the summer. Mrs. Joan Moyer again served as director of the second Dance Workshop conducted on campus. During the academic year, John E. Fries organized a Piano Laboratory Workshop conducted by the Baldwin Company. Finally, the University served as host to the Central District High School Festival. Messrs. Boltz and Zurfluh were conductors and organizers of the festival.

Dr. Richard H. Lowright presented an abstract and paper entitled "Climatic Cause of Variation in Hydraulic Equivalence" at the annual meeting of the Geological Society of America, Northwestern Section. Dr. Wallace J. Growney was invited to present a lecture entitled "Computer Underwear" to the Philadelphia Section of the Mathematical Association of America. Dr. Gynith C. Giffin presented a paper entitled "Relevant Nuclear Power" to the Pennsylvania Association of College Chemistry Teachers at the University of Pittsburgh. Dr. Edwin M. Van Dam gave a paper with the title "Tungsten Atom Synthesis Methods" at the Chemical Institute of Canada in Toronto.

Members of the Social Science Division published a number of items. Boyd Gibson submitted a review, Maguire, Daniel C., Death By Choice, to The Christian Century magazine. He prepared an additional review of Crosby, Illusion and Disillusion. Dr. Livernois published an article entitled "New Foundations for Theological Reflection on The Problem of Revolutionary Violence" which appeared in the 1975 issue of Susquehanna University Studies. He also abstracted foreign articles for the Journal of Ecumenical Studies. Dr. Charles J. Igoe prepared and distributed a Cooperating Teachers Manual, while Dr. Bastress prepared in final form A Self-Instructional Manual for Instructional Planning. Dr. Housley serves as general editor of the Snyder County Bicentennial History. Dr. Pelton published a book entitled The Psychology of Non-Violence. In addition, he co-authored a research article entitled "The Economics of Teaching," which was published in the March issue of Change. He has submitted a manuscript with the title "A Perspective on Violence" to the Journal for the Theory of Social Behavior. Dr. Schweikert published two papers: Misanin, J.R., Chubb, L.D., Quinn, S.A., and Schweikert, G.E., "An Apparatus and Procedure for the Effective Instrumental Training of Neonatal and Infant Rats," Bulletin of the Psychonomic Society, and Wilson, Vardaris, and Schweikert, G.E., Entitled "A Technique for Cannula Implantation in the Decorticate Preparation," which appeared in Physiology and Behavior. Dr. Misanin co-authored two papers: Campbell, B.A., Misanin, J.R., White, B.C., and Lytle, L.D., "Species Differences in Ontogeny of Memory: Indirect Support for Neural Maturation as a Determinant of Forgetting," Journal of Comparative and Physiological Psychology; Misanin, J.R., Hardy, S., and Goodyear, J., "Effects of Shock Intensity on Speed and Response Competition in the Escape Training of Neonatal and Infant Rats," Bulletin of the Psychonomic Society.

Members of the Language and Literature Division list publications also. Dr. Lawrence A. Abler completed a paper on Rilke to be included in a Bucknell University Press volume entitled The Binding of Proteus. He has also completed a manuscript on the translation of Kleist's "Der zerbrochene Krug" for submission to a publisher for evaluation. Dr. Marjorie W. McCune continues to abstract articles for 17th Century News. She is co-editor of the 1974 Humanities Colloquium volume to be published by Bucknell University Press. She also published an article entitled "The Tomb as Image: The Stones of Browning and Ruskin" in the 1975 Susquehanna University Studies. Ronald L. Dotterer is co-editor of the 1975 Humanities Colloquium volume to be published by the Bucknell University Press. Dr. Robert G. Mowry's doctoral dissertation was published in the April 1975 issue of the Bulletin of the Spanish Royal Academy of History. He continues to work on the revision of Spanish: Listening, Speaking, Reading, Writing. Dr. Jane F. Barlow published an article entitled "Review of Book XV of Tacitus" which appeared in The Classical World in March 1975.

In the Science Division, Dr. Growney reviewed a paper for the Pi Mu Epsilon Journal. Bruce S. Wagenseller compiled a booklet entitled "Exercise Journal" published by Blue Shield of Pennsylvania.

In the Business Division, Raymond G. Laverdiere published two articles, "Information Systems and Management," and "Cash Management." Both articles were published in Managerial Planning.

development /finances

THE EXTRAORDINARY AMOUNT of time which faculty and staff devote to this University's future planning gives some evidence of the conviction present on campus that Susquehanna is fulfilling a vital role in higher education. This dedication to purpose is carried forward and exhibited by the various committees of the Board of Directors who meet as often as monthly on University-related matters. Such broad based leadership gives us all confidence in the future. Of course, the role of many hundreds of alumni cannot be overstated. Their involvement in campus affairs, alumni meetings and fund raising programs all attest to the growing constituency which is Susquehanna.

With this confidence, we are all agreed that Susquehanna University can meet its future commitment. Further testimony is the successful $2 million capital campaign completed in 1972 which received unprecedented support from alumni and friends. Since that time, we have been strengthening our annual giving program, the Susquehanna University Fund, which last year exceeded its goal of $175,000. Between 25 and 30 percent of our alumni make annual donations to the University. Overall, Susquehanna again raised more than $800,000 in total gifts and grants for the year ending June 30, 1975. On the following pages, we express our sincere appreciation listing the names of all those who have given to the various fund raising programs during this past year. This support is the lifeblood of our University!

Much remains to be done. A new and more challenging development program awaits approval by the Board of Directors at its semi-annual meeting in October. As this program unfolds, one will note a transition from an emphasis on buildings and facilities to the more intangible areas of program development, faculty salaries and scholarship aid. These latter needs are to be satisfied through an intensified effort to raise funds for endowment. Historically, Susquehanna's endowment has lagged behind many other colleges in the region. A modest fund of just under $2 million constitutes our total endowment resources. Over the next several years we hope to add $2.5 million to endowment. This will provide annual income for improvements in faculty salaries, scholarship aid, and funds for new and vital program development.

Another major goal of the development program will be to provide funds for the new physical education building. While construction began this summer and the structure is to be completed by September 15, 1976, the University arranged initial financing so that this much needed project would not be delayed any longer. A major portion of the campaign will be devoted to raising funds for repaying the cost of this facility. On June 24 bids for this new 42,000 square foot structure were opened and the Spera Construction Company of Harrisburg was awarded the contract on a low bid of just over $2 million. In addition to this new structure to be attached to the existing Alumni Gymnasium, the present building will receive a complete renovation. While Alumni Gymnasium served the University well, it became apparent during the growth years of the 1960s that it was inadequate for present needs. For a number of years we have been forced to play intercollegiate basketball games at the Selinsgrove High School. Yet, this facility has been put off until last due to our feeling that certain academic and special-use buildings had higher priority on our list of needs. We are all delighted that circumstances now permit us to move forward.

Designed to augment our educational program, the building is essentially structured to facilitate the recreational needs of students, with secondary emphasis given to intercollegiate sports. The new section will contain a main gymnasium with seating for 1700, a modern swimming pool with spectator space for 600, new and complete offices, locker rooms, special-use and auxiliary areas for the instruction of lifelong sports, and classroom facilities. It will provide the campus with a final major facility needed to round out our educational program and expand to 11 the list of major buildings either erected or renovated since 1959. The value of Susquehanna's assets, with the completion of this building, will approach $30 million.

Several other important physical needs of a much less costly nature are included in the forthcoming development program. Both are necessary for the well-being of the University. Hassinger Hall is in need of major renovations and, to a somewhat lesser extent, so is Seibert Hall. These are the two oldest dormitories and both have withstood many years of use. Over the next several years, we will need to address ourselves to these two matters.

Even with this need to further renovate buildings, the major thrust of our efforts in development over the years immediately ahead will rest with a commitment to strengthen the academic program. In all, we shall need to raise about $6.5 million over the next four to five years.

While past experience would indicate that the total package of needs described can be met, it is important to place priority on certain "urgent" needs to be satisfied during the short term—two to three years. As a result, the Board of Directors is now considering a plan for action: A Phase I Plan to satisfy the most urgent of these needs—about $2 or $2.5 million to be raised as part of an intensive capital campaign among our alumni and friends during 1976 and 1977. The goal would include approximately $1 million for the physical education building and $1.5 million for endowment—scholarships, faculty salaries and program development. While the Phase I effort is underway, plans will be directed toward satisfying the remaining goals.

During these crucial times, Susquehanna has been fortunate in being able to maintain a balanced budget. Our $6 million operating budget grows about 7 percent annually. We believe that prudent management is the key, and we have taken pride in our ability to reduce non-educational expenditures without affecting the academic program. In fact, we believe that we have been able to add strength to many of our offerings. In part, this is due to the generosity of alumni and friends and to Susquehanna's ability to attract ample numbers of qualified students.

In addition to gifts and grants from alumni and friends, the University's financial stability is further enhanced by the continued interest and support of the Lutheran Church. The Central Pennsylvania Synod budgeted almost $140,000 for the University again during this past year and, coupled with a new program of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania which provides direct grants for private higher education, the University was able to increase its operating income by about $250,000. These two sources of funds helped significantly to reduce the need for further increases in student costs during this past year when the rate of inflation exceeded 12 percent.

You can note from these reports that the campus has changed markedly during the last several years. Another significant addition was the completion of a Science Research facility in the fall of 1974. It was funded by the University and the National Science Foundation. Susquehanna is now able to provide its science students with opportunities to perform independent study and research in modern and spacious quarters. I might add that this emphasis on student research has been recognized by outsiders as a major strength of the University. During the past year we have also expanded and improved the offices of a number of our faculty. As student advising and personal consultation increase in importance, the University finds that there is greater need for more adequate office space. The Religion and Philosophy and Sociology departments have been relocated to more suitable quarters, and the English Department offices in the Cottage on University Avenue have been modernized. Of necessity the Development Division—Alumni, University Relations and Development offices—have vacated the basement of Hassinger Hall and been relocated in Selinsgrove Hall. This opened additional housing for men.

THE UNIVERSITY would like to use this means of expressing its appreciation to all those who supported its various programs during the past year. The period covered by this report is July 1, 1974 through June 30, 1975. Only contributions received during the year are included here. Pledges to the various University programs are not included, but payments made on such pledges are acknowledged. One asterisk denotes a gift of $100 or more; two asterisks, $500 or more. A dagger after the name indicates that a matching gift was received from the donor's employer. A separate listing of University Associates, those giving $100 or more to annual giving—The Susquehanna University Fund—is included at the beginning of the donor's section. The following list is intended to be comprehensive of all donors to the University but, should there be omissions, we ask that they be brought to the attention of the University.

BEQUESTS TO THE UNIVERSITY

THROUGHOUT THE YEARS men and women of varied backgrounds and means have reaffirmed their faith in the future of the University by providing substance to the educational program through the use of their wills. Over the years the University has received bequests ranging from $100 to $500,000 and each has played a significant role in the advancement of the University.

During the year ending June 30, 1975 Susquehanna received three bequests from former alumni and friends. The University wishes to recognize these benefactors, since these funds will serve to strengthen the long-range educational programs of the University.

Pearl I. Kawel, a former school teacher in the Sunbury, Pa. School District bequeathed funds to perpetuate a scholarship fund at the University.

Elsie M. Wisler of Williamsburg, Blair County, Pa. made a memorial bequest to Susquehanna in memory of her husband, the Rev. Charles F. Wisler, a member of the Class of 1926.

Miller Gerhardt, a member of the Class of 1930, bequeathed one-half of his estate of $300,000 to the University to be used as determined by the Board of Directors.

The Covenants

A summary description of church-college relationships as expressed in the Covenants adopted in 1973 by the Central Pennsylvania Synod of the Lutheran Church in America and the institutions of higher education related to it—Gettysburg College and Susquehanna University.

(Reprinted from a leaflet prepared by Gettysburg College and Susquehanna University in cooperation with the Commission on Higher Education of the Central Pennsylvania Synod)

The Lutheran church has always been concerned with education. For Luther himself this meant both the establishment of educational programs within the church and the reform of university education.

In the early history of the United States higher education was solely sponsored by church bodies. In its turn, the Lutheran church and individuals acting in its interest were active in the founding of a number of colleges, among which are two in the Central Pennsylvania Synod: Gettysburg College, founded in 1832, and Susquehanna University, founded in 1858. These have had a longstanding relationship with the church which is reflected in the Charters and Constitutions of the two institutions, the Constitution of the Synod, and the history of mutual service between the church and the colleges.

Although some of the circumstances surrounding the founding of these colleges have changed, there are compelling reasons—both traditional and contemporary—for continuance of these relationships.

The Central Pennsylvania Synod acknowledges that the Lutheran Church in America has a dual mission to serve both the social needs of the secular community and the institutional needs of the Lutheran church, and that, on both points, an active and vigorous church-college relationship is beneficial.

In the struggle for a just society, the church turns to its colleges as centers for the discussion and debate of the goals of society, and as a source of future leadership in nurturing those values which enhance the sacredness of life. It is not in accord with the church's mission to permit the complete secularization of society. If all colleges were to become secular institutions they might easily lose contact with the virtues and goals which it is the obligation of Christians to foster. It is, therefore, incumbent upon the church to be able to influence the nature and direction of higher education. In order to do this, the church must continue its close contact with specific colleges.

The church constantly seeks to renew itself physically and spiritually. The church speaks effectively to each generation in terms of the problems and language of contemporary society. The church must not cut itself off from the intellectual and spiritual challenges which a church-college relation poses, but, rather, remain in a position of understanding of contemporary intellectual movements by maintaining its relationship with its colleges.

In adopting the Covenants with Gettysburg College and Susquehanna University in 1973, the Central Pennsylvania Synod affirmed the important value of its continuing relationship with its institutions of higher education and posed specific ways in which these relationships might be strengthened.

Both Gettysburg and Susquehanna acknowledge their historical connections with the Lutheran church from their inception and pledge to continue this relationship while constantly reevaluating it in order to seek and develop new dimensions of mutual benefit. Thus, the colleges will continue to train students for service to the church and to include the expression of Christian teachings as a distinctive element of their character as colleges related to the church. This expression will take place in an intellectual atmosphere marked by the free exploration of ideas. In sum, Gettysburg College and Susquehanna University recognize and accept the reciprocity inherent in their relationship with the Central Pennsylvania Synod; the Synod has expectations of the colleges and they in turn have valid expectations of the Synod.

The colleges and the Synod have therefore covenanted together to serve one another in a number of specific areas:

1. ACADEMIC QUALITY

The colleges will maintain the highest possible standards of academic performance in an atmosphere which promotes the free and open exploration of ideas, supported by the Synod which also recognizes that the pursuit of this academic obligation sometimes involves challenge and criticism of cherished ideas and institutions of the church.

2. CULTURE

The colleges will seek to be centers for artistic and intellectual activities which relate to contemporary issues and achievements and will encourage participation in these activities by the Synod's clergy and congregations. The Synod will act as intermediary in making the colleges conversant with the artistic and intellectual activities of the church.

3. RELIGION

The colleges will provide for the curricular study of religion, the Christian faith and the values transmitted by the Christian church, and will foster an academic setting in which both the freedom and the responsibility inherent in the Christian perspective can be demonstrated. The Synod will provide counsel in matters relating to the study of religion and cooperate in efforts to secure teachers and other needed resources.

4. CONTINUING EDUCATION

The colleges will provide to the church the benefits of their scholarship in such areas as theology, the humanities and the sciences and, as they are able, create opportunities for continuing education on the part of the clergy and laity of the Synod and make the time and talent of institutional personnel available to the church. The Synod will encourage its pastors and congregations to utilize these resources.

5. PASTORAL MINISTRY

The colleges will sponsor vigorous pastoral ministries to their respective communities under the leadership of ordained Lutheran clergymen and will provide regular opportunities for worship, counseling, and the nurturing of Christian faith and appropriate witness. The Synod will provide counsel to the colleges in matters relating to the campus pastoral ministry and will recognize the chaplain and the chapel program as a part of the church's pastoral efforts.

6. SOCIAL AWARENESS

The colleges will promote an active concern for the human condition among students and faculty, and will encourage involvement in voluntary social outreach efforts, church vocations and social service. The Synod will assist in identifying social issues of special concern to the church and society.

7. FACULTY

The colleges will acquaint each prospective member of the faculty and staff with the nature of the church-college relationship and, insofar as possible, employ persons who are in sympathy with and will actively support this relationship. The Synod will honor the colleges' need for and right to employ professionally qualified persons without regard for their religious affiliation while, at the same time, assist the colleges in establishing contact with prospective staff members who identify with the church.

8. LUTHERAN STUDENTS

The colleges will actively recruit qualified Lutheran students and will provide such financial aid for them as is appropriate and possible. The Synod, both through its own structure and among its pastors and congregations, will encourage qualified Lutheran students to apply for admission to Gettysburg College and Susquehanna University.

9. WITNESS

The colleges will act toward their students, employees, and the surrounding community in a way which promotes the objectives and values of the church and witnesses to the Word of God. The Synod will act toward its pastors, members, and the surrounding community in a way which will promote the intellectual objectives of clear and honest thinking which are common to both church and college.

10. BOARD MEMBERSHIP

The Synod will select for the boards of governance of the colleges synodical candidates who are committed to the strengthening of church-related higher education and who are willing to devote their wisdom, energy, and resources to the support of the colleges.

11. COMMUNICATION

The colleges will communicate with and interpret their programs to the officers, congregations and pastors of the Synod, and will render periodic reports to the Synod concerning their activities and achievements, financial status and needs. The Synod, likewise, will interpret and promote the colleges among the members of the Synod and thereby build a loyal base of support for Gettysburg College and Susquehanna University.

12. FINANCES

The Synod will provide maximum financial support to the colleges as is consistent with the Synod's resources. It will make annual budget allocations to the colleges, make grants to their endowment, experimental programs and capital projects from time to time, and encourage Synod members to include the colleges in their charitable giving and estate planning.

13. FACILITIES

14. REVIEW

The Synod will provide a structure through which the colleges may seek counsel and evaluation from the Synod and fulfill the responsibilities of the Covenants; and, according to Lutheran Church in America guidelines, the Covenants will be reviewed at four-year intervals.

The complete texts of Central Pennsylvania Synod Covenants with Gettysburg College and Susquehanna University are available through the Synod office as well as the presidents' offices at both colleges. This leaflet has been prepared by the colleges in cooperation with the Commission on Higher Education of the Central Pennsylvania Synod.

Alumni Association Nominations

IN JANUARY, all committees of the Susquehanna University Alumni Association will meet on campus for the annual workshop sessions. The Nominations Committee and the Awards Committee are particularly interested in help and suggestions from alumni. They seek names to consider for the Executive Committee, five vacancies for three-year terms as Members-at-large, one vacancy for a five-year term on the University Board of Directors, and candidates for the Alumni Award for Achievement (in one's profession) and the Alumni Award for Service (to the University). Please use this form and the back or separate sheet, supply as much data as possible, and send your suggestions to Buss Carr '52, Director of Alumni Relations, Susquehanna University, Selinsgrove, Pa. 17870. All material should be received not later than January 1, 1976 to be placed on the appropriate committee agenda.

"SHE'S A BONNIE LASS."

"Aye."

And she's one of the reasons (besides the always-excellent performance of the Marching Brass and Percussion itself) that increasing numbers of Crusader football fans remain in the stands at halftime instead of going out for hot dogs and coffee—for the past two seasons their eyes and ears have been glued to Kathy Crawford '78 of Berkeley Heights, N.J., Susquehanna's very own bagpiper. Band director Jim Steffy, who would like to expand the SU pipe corps as a logical extension of the marching organization's British military style, has been using Kathy as a solo piper, escorted by Dave Danielson '77 of Clinton, Md., on the snare drum. And there isn't anything to stir the soul quite like the featured exit march, "Scotland the Brave."

Kathy started piping at Governor Livingston High School and has played with both the Kearny Caledonian Pipe Band and the Highlander Girl Pipers, a unit of her high school band. She wears the Ancient Bruce tartan and some 30 awards won in individual competition at such gatherings of the clan as the Highland Games, which are held from April through October throughout the country with more than 1000 pipers competing—she goes to five or six each year. For the past four years she also has attended the Grandfather Mountain Summer School for Piping in North Carolina.

A French major, she plans to be an interpreter. While at Susquehanna she has taught pre-schoolers at the Valley Nursing School and is this term teaching French in the University's program at St. Michael's School in Sunbury. And she also teaches piping to beginners.

Being among the uninformed concerning this instrument which dates back to ancient Egypt—bagpipes discovered in tombs, Nero piping while Rome burned (not fiddling as popular legend would have it)—we were interested to learn from Kathy that girl pipers are comparatively rare. That pipes are not as difficult to play as people think they are, although the fingering is completely different from any other instrument and, thus, players of other instruments have a bit of a time adjusting. The bag is actually a reservoir of air (even we assumed that) and the piper can play only nine notes. Most bagpipe music is written especially for the pipes—marches, strathspeys, reels, slow airs, and piobairchd (pronounced pibroch), the classical music of the pipe. She tells us that a set of bagpipes cost about $375 if they're made with imitation ivory and nickel. If made with the real thing, ivory and silver, they can cost over $1000. But African black wood is needed: this is no longer exported from Uganda, so traditional pipes are not now easy to come by.

Kathy says that piping has introduced her to thousands of people and made it possible for her to travel thousands of miles into Florida and Canada and many places in between. She especially cherishes memories of playing in the Preakness Parade in Baltimore and the Inaugural Parade of 1973, and of her unit winning the Governor's Cup, the national championship, in 1972.

Oh yes, the thing she wears in her right sock. It's a real dagger, boys—a sgian dhuih (pronounced skean du). Traditionally a weapon of war, but not employed frequently these days. The only time Kathy was tempted to use it was when her Highlander Girl Pipers, fully outfitted for an appearance with the Scots Guards in New York City, were accosted by IRA pickets shouting, "Kill the Scots." At Susquehanna, she uses her sgian dhuih for spreading peanut butter and jelly.

ON OUR COVER: Weber Chapel Auditorium is candle-lighted as the people gather and a brass group plays outside prior to the traditional Candlelight Service on December 7. The unusual effect is created by placing candles in sand inside paper bags. They are sometimes called "luminaries." Other photos of the Candlelight Service appear on page 17.

Also inside this issue, we present several items of special interest. One is an article, beginning on the next page, about the Susquehanna at Oxford program conducted in England every two years. Another tells about a group of alumni, students and faculty who have made significant creative contributions to the production of Pennsylvania's Bicentennial Album, which is narrated by TV's "Bonanza" star, Lorne Greene. This story begins on page 11. And those who want to know more about the new physical education building will enjoy reviewing the floor plans illustrated on page 35.

1976 promises to be a great year for Alma Mater. We trust that it will be a great year for all our readers too.

Story and pictures by PETER SILVESTRI

MOST PEOPLE would prefer a four-week tour of the European continent to six weeks at the summer school of their choice, but the college students who participated in last summer's Susquehanna at Oxford program preferred the "study" portion—one week in London and five weeks in residency at University College, Oxford—to the optional continental tour that followed.

The reason for this is not that the tour lacked excitement, but that most people seem to find Oxford one of the most enjoyable, stimulating and pleasant places they have ever had the good fortune to visit for an extended time.

Although the students speak favorably of the actual course work at Oxford, they are nearly unanimous in the opinion that the location itself and the chance to live there for several weeks is the most significant aspect of the program.

Oxford is both a small city of about 100,000 people and a university, or, more accurately in American terms, an affiliation of 36 small, independent colleges. In existence at least since 912 when it is mentioned in The Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, Oxford boasts both modern amenities and medieval charm. A busy commercial center coexists with the quieter academic area.

The town is rich in cultural and recreational opportunities, ranging from theater, music, and lectures to spirit and song in the many pubs and punting on the Thames and Cherwell rivers. But it is at the same time quiet and unhurried, and its splendid architecture and large parks provide beauty that few urban centers can match. Combine these blessings with the fact that a stay in Oxford exposes American students to a foreign culture, and the result is a summer experience that is both an education and a vacation.

The Susquehanna at Oxford program is conducted every two years under the direction of Dr. Robert L. Bradford, head of the S.U. Political Science Department. It was offered last summer and will be held again in the summer of 1977. "The purpose of the program," according to its descriptive brochure, "is to provide an opportunity for undergraduates and interested adults to study firsthand in Great Britain the major issues, events, and personalities which have an impact upon contemporary British society and culture, and to do this through exposure to persons prominent in British scholarship and public life." Guided travel and tours in England are directly related to the program of study, for which academic credit is awarded.

The heart of the program is the five-week residency at Oxford where students select two courses from four offerings. As one of their courses, students are encouraged to take either British History, Politics and Society: 1870 to the Present, or British Literature: 1870 to the Present. These two courses are part of Oxford's regular summer school program, and consist of daily lectures by British scholars and political and governmental leaders. The Susquehanna program supplements these lectures with seminars led by S.U. faculty members. Last summer the seminar leaders were Dr. Elizabeth Wiley, professor of English at Susquehanna, and Philip Turner, visiting instructor from Harvard University.

The S.U. staff also offers two other courses which vary each time the program is run. Last summer these were The Oxford Movement: Religion's Impact upon 19th Century British Culture, taught by the Rev. Dr. Edgar S. Brown, chaplain, and History of the Fine Arts in England: 1660-1837, taught by Dr. James L. Boeringer, University organist and associate professor of music. These courses also included guest lecturers and excursions.

The program is open to undergraduates from Susquehanna and other colleges, secondary school teachers, recent college graduates seeking enrichment, or any seriously interested adult. Two undergraduate course units, or six hours of credit, are awarded to students who successfully complete the program. This credit is transferable to other institutions and counts toward the permanent certification of secondary teachers in Pennsylvania. Participants who fulfill the requirements also receive a special certificate attesting that fact.

Despite rising costs due to inflation, which is worse in Europe than in the U.S., the 1975 Susquehanna at Oxford program had the largest enrollment in the history of the program with 36 students. The participants included 11 S.U. students and two 1975 graduates, 19 undergraduates and one 1975 graduate from other institutions, two school teachers, and a musician. In some cases the economic situation served to boost enrollment, as the recent college graduates said that they viewed the Oxford program as a chance to do something constructive for the summer after failing to find a job.

The program is intended for persons primarily interested in the humanities and the social sciences, but those enrolled in 1975 represent a wide variety of disciplines, including food science, business administration, broadcasting, mathematics, and biology.

Susquehannans participating were Lynn Corcelius '76 of Huntingdon, Pa.; Jean Craig '78 of Alexandria, Va.; Elizabeth Daum '77 of Morristown, N.J.; Christine Fontein '78 of Oradell, N.J.; John Goodenow '75 of Mifflinburg, Pa.; Debra Mattern '76 of Wyomissing, Pa.; Mary Lou Miller '76 of Glenside, Pa.; Susan Reisch '77 of Wantagh, N.Y.; Alice Roher '77 of Hatboro, Pa.; Richard Rowley '76 of Middletown, N.Y.; Cordelia Rust '77 of Peterborough, N.H.; Peter Thompson '75 of Princeton, N.J.; and John White '76 of Prospect, Ky.

Other students came from Princeton, Georgetown, Penn State, Ohio Wesleyan, Denison, University of Mississippi, Boston University, Bates, Marquette, Michigan State, University of California at Davis, Kent State, American University, Allegheny, Washington College, Hanover, University of South Florida, Virginia Commonwealth, and Old Dominion.

The group arrived in London on June 29 for a week of acclimation to the British lifestyle. That week of "getting acquainted" is "essential," according to one student, who found that British society operates on a "lower key" than American: "People take their time." British shopkeepers and sales clerks, in fact, take their time to an extent that seems quite un-businesslike to some Americans, accustomed to fast service and stores that never close. In England you don't get jumped on by an eager salesperson the moment you enter a shop. In fact, you may be entirely ignored. And proprietors have a habit of closing for lunch and tea. This kind of "culture shock" can be annoying at first, but the students had time to relax and enjoy it.

During that first week, students had plenty of free time along with several educational excursions, including a tour of London via open-topped, double-decker bus, guided tour of the Houses of Parliament, private tour of Westminster Abbey, a boat ride on the Thames River, and day trips to Canterbury Cathedral and Windsor Castle. The students also were given a seven-day pass on the "London Transport" subway and bus system and tickets to several museums, concerts and theater events. Accommodations in London were at the Rhodes Private Hotel, a small place catering to student groups and located in a quiet neighborhood near Hyde Park.

The typical daily schedule at Oxford consisted of one class in the morning and one in the afternoon. In the morning, a delightful short walk by and through several other colleges took the students to the Oxford Law Library, one of the few modern structures making an appearance in the medieval city, where the regular university summer school lectures were held. The afternoon seminars, conducted by the Susquehanna faculty, were held at University College where the group resided.

Like most colleges at Oxford, University is laid out in a series of adjoining quadrangles. The S.U. group lived in the Durham Quad, named after William of Durham who founded the college in 1249, making it the oldest at Oxford. Although the surroundings evoke bygone centuries, lodging quarters at University College were completely modernized in the 1960s. The students' accommodations there are quite comfortable, with each having a private room or suite. Of course, one has to get used to a lack of such niceties as air conditioning (or "refrigerated air" as it is called by the very few places in England which have it). But one can get used to going down the hall to the toilet or down the stairs to the basement for a shower.

Students took three meals a day in the high ceilinged, timber-vaulted Hall of the college, surrounded by stained glass and portraits of past chancellors of the institution. To sit down and have meals served by a small army of waiters, boys entitled "scouts," was a change of pace for those used to parading through a cafeteria line. Not every menu was to everyone's liking and some students probably felt that English food's "bland" reputation is well-earned. But others appreciated the fact that the food was "healthy" and not processed, frozen, or laced with chemicals and preservatives as is American fare. The Susquehanna group adopted a British custom and met for tea and conversation at 4 each afternoon.

There is certainly no shortage of things to do in Oxford. In the words of one student, "Just to go out for a stroll or visit another college was a good experience." For someone interested in art, architecture in particular, the entire city is a museum. The many colleges in such close proximity together comprise a somewhat homogeneous display of stonework, towers, spires, and gardens, and yet each manages to maintain a distinct identity.

The many colleges and the town are interesting for their people as well as for their buildings. The combination of summer school students and tourists from various foreign countries gives Oxford a cosmopolitan atmosphere that is probably unmatched by any other city of such relatively small size. The person passing you on the street is as apt to be an Indian or Japanese as a native, and the people at the table next to you in the pub are as likely to be speaking French or German as English. And one gets an appreciation for the extent to which American culture is exported when the pub sing-along numbers are selections such as "Darling Clementine" or "Bicycle Built for Two."

A distinctive quality of the location, especially from a student's point of view, is that it has a definite intellectual aura. Despite the distractions, it is easy to be serious and studious there. It is difficult to imagine being frivolous inside such an historical intellectual landmark as the Bodleian Library. The place invites thoughtfulness, and debates of academic issues are as likely to occur outside the classroom as in.

There are also opportunities for physical exercise, including bicycles and tennis and squash courts. The program's brochure states that there is "even a swimming pool for the rare warm days." However, during the summer of 1975 England's reputation for cold and dampness seemed undeserved. Susquehannans were on the Isles during their longest and warmest hot spell on record.

During the stay at Oxford students also went on several excursions, mainly on the weekends. There were visits to Stratford-on-Avon, Bath, Scotland, Wales, Coventry Cathedral, Warwick Castle, Stonehenge, Cambridge, Blenheim Palace, and Bladon. In addition to new sights, these outings offered the opportunity for informal contact between faculty and students.

At the conclusion of the summer study program at Oxford, students had the option to go on a guided tour of the European continent via rented Volkswagen minibuses. Last summer some 20 students spent three weeks visiting five countries. Three minibuses were driven by tour leader Dr. Bradford, Lourencia Maurer, Susquehanna's coordinator of residence affairs, and this writer.

The itinerary listed Munich, Salzburg, Innsbruck, Lucerne, Interlaken, Heidelberg, Cologne, and Paris. Excursions and special events included a visit to Neuschwanstein Castle, 19th century home of "Mad" Ludwig of Bavaria and the model for the castle in Disneyland; concerts in Salzburg; a walk into the Furka Glacier through a tunnel carved in the ice; trip by cog railway to the snow-covered peak of the Jungfrau, altitude 13,642 feet; and a tour of Versailles Palace outside Paris.

Although some students found the pace of the tour "hectic" after being settled in Oxford for five weeks, all agreed that it was worthwhile. "It was a great way for someone who's never been to Europe to get a taste of the so-called 'tourist attractions,'" commented one student, who noted that "I never could have afforded to take the trip on my own."

The cost of the study portion of the program, including one week in London and five weeks at Oxford was $1285 last summer. This price included round-trip trans-Atlantic jet fare, all tours, excursions, cultural events, entrance fees, room with full English breakfast in London, full room and board and tuition and all lecture and library fees at Oxford. The only items not included were transportation to and from Kennedy Airport in New York, passport fee, lunches and dinners during the week in London, and personal expenses. The cost of the optional continental tour was $575 which included all fees and expenses except for most evening meals and personal spending money.

Dr. Bradford is already beginning to plan for Susquehanna at Oxford in 1977. Persons interested in participating are invited to contact him.

The BICENTENNIAL ALBUM and SU

A SMALL NORTHUMBERLAND, Pa., recording studio has produced an historical documentary album with musical background entitled "The Colonial Keystone: Pennsylvania." Narrated by Lorne Greene, the record has received recognition as the official Pennsylvania Bicentennial album. And Pennsylvania is believed to be the first state to designate such an album. Much of the credit for the success of the undertaking and the quality of the product can be claimed by Susquehanna University students, alumni, and faculty members.

Joe Cipriani '74 of Middleburg, Pa., was associate producer; David Kammerer '76 of Carlisle, Pa., composed

George Adams, Steve Gosewisch and Judy Lepley; Dale Orris '75 of Middleburg and Tom Burns '73 of Beavertown, Pa.

Not everyone involved in the recording has a Susquehanna connection. A central figure who doesn't is Bob Spangler, the producer and director of the Bicentennial album and the owner of the Susquehanna Sound Productions recording studio on A Street in Northumberland. Although he has no direct connection with the University, Spangler is definitely an S.U. booster. He is quick to offer statements of his debt to the Susquehanna people he has employed. "I can't emphasize enough the part they've played," he says. He says it's been a "real blessing" to have such a source of talent so close at hand.

Cipriani is a permanent full-time figure at the studio, acting as director of client relations. Wheeland works there part-time while pursuing graduate studies at Bucknell. Spangler expects Kammerer to join the regular studio staff when he graduates in May.

The plain and modest appearance of the exterior of the Northumberland studio hides a wealth of highly sophisticated electronic equipment inside. The major pieces, a 16-track tape machine and a mixing board, together are valued at close to $60,000, and there is much other smaller gear, including a large variety of microphones and mobile units.

Most of the studio's usual business involves making recordings for outside groups which hire the facilities. The many gospel singing groups which are popular in the area are frequent visitors to the studio, seeking production of about 1000 records. Susquehanna Sound Productions has also done location work for high school district orchestra festivals.

The "Colonial Keystone" album is the first original production the studio has undertaken. Spangler wanted to do something in connection with the Bicentennial. He got things moving last February when he discussed his idea for a documentary with musical background with the state Bicentennial Commission and received the sanction of that group for the project.

Guy Graybill, a Middleburg Area High School history teacher, compiled the historical material from primary sources, and Sigmund Stoler, a professional script writer, prepared a script which includes both narration and several brief dramatizations of actual historical events.

Spangler had wanted a native Pennsylvanian as narrator. He contacted Michael Landon and James Stewart, but neither was available. Greene has the "earthly voice and fatherly image" that was desired. He has wide appeal and is well known through "Bonanza" and other television appearances. And he was available. A memento that Greene took away from his visit to Northumberland for the recording sessions is one of Bucher's twine sculptures, appropriately depicting the head of a Longhorn steer.

The Northumberland studio does not actually cut records. The Bicentennial album material was recorded on the 16-track tape machine, mixed and reduced to two tracks (stereo), and cutting of the record was subcontracted out to firms in Nashville and Cincinnati. The initial run was 20,000 copies, but the producers are hoping for eventual sales of about 250,000.

The finished product is both informative and entertaining. By sticking closely to historical events and the actual words of the figures involved, the album gives a realistic portrayal of the colonial period and avoids romanticism. The focus of the narrative is on Pennsylvania, touching on such people and events as founder William Penn who wanted to name the area New South Wales, George Washington's first military experience during the French and Indian War in the western section of the state, the Continental Congresses and Constitutional Convention in Philadelphia, Benjamin Franklin, and Peter Muhlenberg, "the fighting parson."

The main character in two scenes is James Wilson, a Carlisle lawyer who was a Pennsylvania delegate to the Second Continental Congress which produced the Declaration of Independence. It was not an easy matter for Wilson, who says he was "taught to obey the law," to decide to revolt from the King of England. Many people in the colonies were opposed to independence. And, as Wilson says, declaring independence was an easy thing compared to getting the King to accept it. "There are no heroes," says Wilson, "only desperate men."

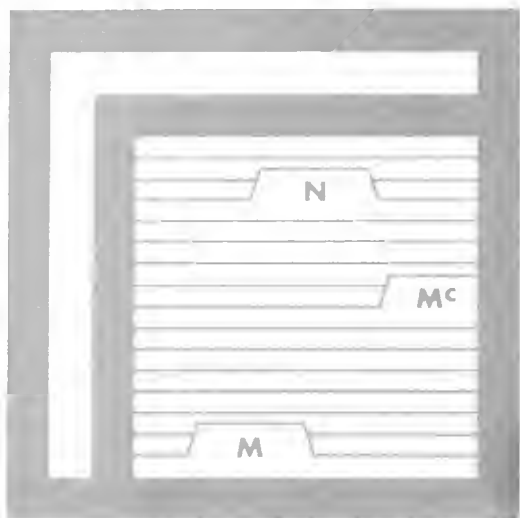

Kammerer's musical score does a good job of establishing the mood of the various scenes, such as the gaiety of British high society in Philadelphia, the exuberance of the first July 4, and the desolation of the winter at Valley Forge. The music captures the sound of the music of the colonial period while maintaining freshness and originality.

The record closes with a song entitled "America the Cradle of Liberty" for which Kammerer wrote both the music and the lyrics. The vocal is ably performed by yet another Susquehannan, Phillip Hollister '77 of Montrose, Pa. It is a moving finale—"Sing a song of freedom, how high the price. Imagine life without freedom, human souls in chains. Would you defend the things you stand for no matter what the price? America, the Cradle of Liberty, your fathers fought to be free."

REPORT from The Class of '75

Susquehanna granted 293 undergraduate degrees in 1975. What are these graduates doing? Where are they? This is a Report from 207 (about 70%) who have responded to the annual Alumni Office query. They've scattered near and far, but the majority are in the Middle Atlantic States—121 in Pennsylvania, 28 in New Jersey, 10 in New York. Maryland is represented by 8 and Virginia by 6. Two are outside the U.S. Occupations? 53 are in business, banking or insurance, 48 are engaged in graduate study, 30 are teaching, 18 are in service occupations, 17 are in accounting, 9 are working with computers, and a great variety of other fields are represented. The new trend this year—reflecting the difficult job market which has made it a slower process for some graduates to move into their area of interest—is the frequency of reporting “temporary” work. At least 14 classify themselves in this category. The Report . . .

Those Fall Holidays

Right now, during winter's icy blasts, is a good time to think back and remember those golden Saturday afternoons of last autumn. Homecoming, for instance. A Pig Roast was the feature for tailgaters this year and it was popular with young and older alike. On opposite page, above left, the Homecoming Court included Cathy MacMoran '79, Wynnewood, Pa., Joyce Laputka '76, Flourtown, Pa., Queen Betsy Walsh '76, Garden City, N.Y., Kathy Lehman '78, York, Pa.; Cheryl Rahlfs '77, Princeton, N.J. Right, President Gustave Weber, Toby Broditsch Skinner '63, and 1928-34 Football Coach Bill Ullery were inducted into the Sports Hall of Fame by George Bantley '41, president of the Alumni Association.

It was not a great day for all the athletes, but Jim Camut '77 scored a TD in the Crusaders' football loss to Lycoming, 13-7. The cross country runners won over York, 27-32, and Kings, 15-50. The soccer team lost to Upsala, 2-1.

The Class of 1970 held its first official reunion on Homecoming Day in a nearby picnic grove. Max Morath in "The Ragtime Years" and an all-campus dance were the evening entertainment. Below, Parents Day was another fall holiday. Here, Mom and Dad have their questions answered at an Open Forum. John Byrosak '77 is greeted by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Byrosak of Mayfield, Pa., at the end of the football contest; this time, a loss to Albright, 42-20, and the Marching Brass and Percussion offers an impromptu concert in front of the Campus Center.

THE 1975 SUSQUEHANNA football season was a sports information director's nightmare—predicting a 9-0 season and watching the team lose its first six games. However, the Crusaders miraculously rebounded to win their final three contests for the longest S.U. gridiron winning streak since 1970.

Why the unexpected collapse? Then why the equally unexpected turnaround? A large part of the answer to both of these questions is that most observers underestimated the significance of the potential quarterback problem that was noted in pre-season. John Bird '76 of Bloomsburg, Pa., failed to move the club in the opening game and was injured in game two. Pete Burton '78 of Chatham, N.J., was an exciting runner but an inaccurate passer, and he lacked confidence in his play selection. It was not until Hadley Brown '77 of Millersburg, Pa., took over the job in the fifth game against Juniata that the offense began to show some life. In the first four games the offense totaled 17 points, an average of about four per game. Seven of those points can be credited to Brown, who directed the team to its only touchdown late in the game against Lycoming. With Brown starting, the offense totaled 95 points in the last five games, an average of 19 per game. When the offense started to click, it eased the pressure on the defense, which also improved its performance during the latter part of the season, intercepting 12 passes during the last three games.

Brown finished the campaign with a total of 49 completions in 102 attempts for 657 yards and four touchdowns. He ranked first in the Middle Atlantic Conference Northern Division in passing and total offense, and was selected by the S.U. coaching staff as the squad's Most Valuable Player and Most Improved. His favorite target, split end Jeff Steltz '76 of Wyomissing, Pa., caught 35 passes, including all four TDs, for 500 yards. He ranked as the top receiver in the MAC North.

Fullback Paul O'Neill '78 of Stratford, N.J., gained 487 yards on 125 carries and led the team in scoring with eight touchdowns. He received the coaches' Best Back award. Defensive backs John Fiske '78 of Rumson, N.J., and Brad Moore '77 of Old Saybrook, Conn., shared the award for most interceptions with four each. Fiske had three in one game, which is believed to be a school record. Middle linebacker Joe LoCastro '76 of Barrington, N.J., was the tackling leader and defensive end Tony Plastino '76 of Lancaster, Pa., had the most quarterback sacks with six. Other

A Slogger Is a Painfully Slow Jogger

By DONALD S. MAYES

I have run 3,485½ miles. Being a slogger (slow jogger), it has taken me six years to reach this pinnacle of punishment. Every plodding mile has been dutifully recorded with my time and weight noted. Sloggers are compulsive record-keepers.*

Slogging became my thing after psychometrics (listening to exercise records and thinking about exercise) failed to do the job. After two months of psychometrics, my weight remained at 215 pounds. I turned to slogging.

It took six months for the breakthrough—one mile completed without stopping. Time: 12 minutes. It was somewhat disconcerting to have my friend, Dick Almond, running backward ahead of me, encouraging me onward and upward to bigger and better slogs.

Donald S. Mayes, D.D.S., is vice president, dental affairs, of Pennsylvania Blue Shield.

A true slogger can be recognized by several items: New running shoes, a stop watch and large abdominal muscles. Clutched in his right hand is a chrome-plated lap counter.

After being hooked, I collected all the paraphernalia that "runners" and "joggers" collect. I joined the National Jogging Association, subscribed to Runners World, switched from sneakers to running shoes and amassed 10 pairs of partially wornout running shoes from virtually every manufacturer. Anything to improve my speed.

Unfortunately, sloggers can't use pedometers. On Father's Day my family presented me with one. I anxiously and carefully measured my stride, set the pedometer appropriately and took off around the track to check its accuracy. Horrors! At the end of a mile, it registered over two miles. Was it broken? I took it back and demanded a new pedometer. Again I carefully measured my stride and set the pedometer. Around the track. Same thing.

I explained my problem to Bruce Wagenseller, the physical education director at Susquehanna University in Selinsgrove, Pa., where I slog. He smiled wryly and explained that sloggers cannot use pedometers because of their heavy abdominal muscle. It seems the meter registers every bounce, so each time my foot struck the ground it registered once; then when my "abdominal muscle" bounced, it registered again. Twice on the same stride. A pedometer cannot be adjusted for sloggers. Pedometer abandoned.

By now I was outside slogging off the track and pounding the pavement. I had increased my distance to three miles and was attempting to break the 10-minute-mile barrier.

Sloggers have difficulty in understanding the "jogging-running" controversy. A slogger is delighted to be called a jogger and is ecstatic if mistaken for a runner. Take, for instance, the time I was slogging along the highway and a car braked to a crawl by my side. The occupant shouted, "You're only going up and down; try going forward."

Another derision of sloggers was my first experience at showing up for the Berwick Marathon, held annually on Thanksgiving Day in Berwick, Pa. Decked out in my blue Susquehanna Running Club sweatshirt and new Nike Kenya shoes, with chrome stop watch firmly attached to my left wrist, I went to the desk to register, attempting to control my abdominal muscles so they did not hang out over my sweatpants. The registrar asked me if I was going to race and nearly fell off his chair laughing. I said no, I only wanted a program, and meekly crept out the door.

Avoiding such crudity the following year, I registered by mail, showed up and applied slogger psychology to running this 10-mile "marathon." Decked out in my slogger outfit, I took the slogger's favorite position—the tail end of the starting group.

When the starting gun was fired, I fought to maintain my last position. It was beautiful. No one passed me. No wipeouts. After the first four miles I began to pass the laggards. First, the younger runners who ran themselves out, limping back. Next, the ones who were out of shape and had started too fast. Gradually, 15 people were passed. A slogger does not measure how far from the leader he is; he measures how far from last he is. I came in 15th—from the bottom (101st out of 115).

Sloggers are not overly fond of joggers and runners because of their attitude toward us. Invariably, when out slogging, I'll see two runners in the distance wave to each other as they pass. As I approach them I raise my hand in acknowledgement, and they turn their heads the other way.

We sloggers suffer other derisions from runners and joggers. The Susquehanna Running Club recently awarded me a large orange, triangular sign reading "Slow Moving Object" to be worn on my back while running on the road.

Even the animals recognize sloggers as being different. Once, two runners who had just passed me (without a wave or comment) were rapidly pulling away and passed within three feet of a dog that never batted an eye at them. When I approached, the dog swiftly took off after me, baring his fangs and attempting to remove my right leg.

Sloggers are also subject to discrimination. The ultimate putdown was the time the local police ordered me to use only truck routes while slogging through town because, they said, I was breaking up the pavement. I guess sloggers just don't float like runners.

You can tell a slogger by his T-shirt. Sloggers wear only large and extra large, one of the membership requirements for our organization, The National Slogging Association. If you run faster than a 10-minute mile, you're not eligible. In the unlikely event you run a race, you must not finish among the top three-quarters of those entered.

If you fail to meet these criteria, we immediately discharge you into the National Jogging Association as being unfit for membership in our club.

'A true slogger can be recognized by several items: New running shoes, a stop watch and large abdominal muscles.'

This piece is reprinted, per the dateline, from The New York Times of December 21. It was sent out over the Times' wire service and appeared simultaneously in a number of metropolitan newspapers throughout the country. As previously reported in the pages of The Alumnus, the Susquehanna Running Club has many regular devotees among faculty, staff, and friends in the community. Dr. Mayes formerly practiced dentistry in Sunbury, where he still resides.

coaching staff awards went to offensive guard Mike Monahan '77 of Rockville, Md., Best Lineman; offensive tackle Todd Frey '79 of York, Pa., Best Rookie; safety Dave Breyemeier '78 of Duryea, Pa., Most Aggressive; defensive back Ron Caylor '79 of Falls Church, Va., Best Reserve Back; and defensive tackle Kevin Zumpetta '79 of Morristown, N.J., Best Reserve Lineman.

Four Susquehanna gridgers were named to the first team offensive unit of the MAC-North All-Star Squad: Steltz at split end, Gerry Huesken '77 of Palmyra, N.J., at tackle, Monahan at guard, O'Neill at fullback. Plastino received honorable mention as a defensive end on the ECAC Division III All-Star Squad.

Although our records are not complete for all seasons of S.U. football, research by the Public Information Office and the Athletic Department indicate that Steltz has established a new school record for career receiving yardage. In three years of varsity competition he caught 100 passes for 1379 yards. His total of 539 yards in 1974 stands as the single season mark.

The football coaching staff credits the players with great "perseverance" for never giving up despite the disappointment of the first six losses and for being able to turn things around with three straight wins. It is hoped that next September the team can pick up where it left off in November.

The cross country squad, coached by Bruce Wagenseller, enjoyed one of its best campaigns and had the only winning record among Orange and Maroon fall sports teams with a 9-6 mark. The young group had its troubles on the road, winning only one of six races on foreign courses. However, they were nearly unbeatable at home, winning eight of nine meets at S.U. The harriers made a respectable eighth place finish among 18 teams in the Middle Atlantic Conference Championships at Gettysburg, won by the host school. Especially gratifying was the fact that the Crusaders came in ahead of Delaware Valley, a tough opponent which had defeated them in a dual meet.

Jeff Yoder '76 of Mt. Carmel, Pa., concluded an excellent season and a fine career by taking fourth place individually in a field of 126 runners at the MAC meet. The race-winner from Widener outdistanced the pack by a full minute, but Yoder was only five seconds out of second place. During the regular season Yoder took first place in 12 of the 15 meets. After missing most of last season with a leg injury, he steadily improved this fall and turned in his best time on the 4.9 mile S.U. course in his last home meet with a 24:39.

Dan Ditzler '77 of Rosemont, Pa., was the most consistent high finisher among Yoder's supporting cast. He came in second three times and third three times, and never finished worse than ninth. Yoder received the coach's MVP award, while Dave Nelson of Croton Falls, N.Y., was named the Best Freshman.

The soccer team won some, lost some, tied one, and one was rained out. The booters compiled a 5-5-1 record and saw their chance for a winning record disappear into the Carlisle mud when the final game at Dickinson could not be played because of rain and could not be rescheduled because of the approach of first-term exams. The .500 mark does allow the seniors to boast that they never played on a losing team. Records for the previous three years were 5-5-2 in 1972, 6-3-3 in 1973, and 6-5-2 in 1974.

Ironically, the 1975 squad played its best soccer in losing efforts. Coach Neil Potter was exceedingly proud of his team following narrow losses to Elizabethtown, 5-4, and Bucknell, 1-0. Those two clubs qualified for the post-season NCAA championships and few opponents fared as well against them as did the Crusaders. Potter termed the E'town tilt "the most unusual game I've coached in eight years." After taking a 2-1 halftime lead, the host Blue Jays exploded for three quick second half goals to build a 5-1 advantage with 16 minutes left before the Susquehannans roared back with three scores of their own.

Potter proved himself a keen judge of talent when in pre-season he said that Bruce Fehn '77 of West Caldwell, N.J., was the most improved lineman on the team. Fehn, who had one goal and one assist a year ago, came through as the Crusaders' high scorer in 1975. He took 38 shots for seven goals and five assists to lead in all three categories. Other top scorers were Rob Hazel '77 of Chesapeake City, Md., with five goals and Brian Jadney '78 of Churchville, Pa., with four. Potter presented Fehn with the Best Offensive Player award.

Veteran fullback Bill Dorman '76 of Glen Rock, N.J., was named Best Defensive Player and fullback Howie Baker '79 of Basking Ridge, N.J., was tabbed Best Rookie. Halfback and co-captain Pat Kreger '76 of Trenton, N.J., was elected to the second team of the Middle Atlantic Conference Northern Division All-Star Squad.

At season's end, Dr. Potter announced his retirement as coach in order to devote more time to his academic duties as an associate professor of chemistry. The position has not yet been filled. Soccer alumni in the Selinsgrove area with spare time on fall afternoons are welcome to apply for the part-time job.

The field hockey squad didn't win half its games, but didn't lose half either. The lady Crusaders endured two frustrating ties to finish with a 3-4-2 record. Although Coach Connie Delbaugh was disappointed that they couldn't match last year's 5-4 mark, first winning record in the sport at S.U. since 1962, the women can still be proud of their achievements playing a schedule that includes such bigger opponents as Bucknell, who defeated them 3-0, and Bloomsburg and Shippensburg state colleges, whom they beat 4-2 and 3-2.

Right-inner Sue Booth '77 and center forward Audrey Klijian '78, both of Media, Pa., led the squad in scoring with six and five goals respectively. Miss Booth was picked for the first team of the Susquehanna Valley Field Hockey Association All-Star Squad. Left-inner Leslie Beers '76 of Springfield, Pa., and goalie Chris Evans '78 of Villanova, Pa., made the second team, and fullback JoAnn Kinkel '78 of Red Lion, Pa., was given honorable mention.

Physical education instructor and women's athletic coach Rose Ann Neff continues to be Susquehanna's most nationally and internationally prominent athlete. Last year she was named to the U.S. National women's teams for both field hockey and lacrosse.

During October she traveled with the national lacrosse squad's Touring Team to Great Britain and was part of the most successful tour in the history of the group. She scored 28 goals while the team went undefeated and untied in 13 games. Victories included a 6-5 decision over England—the first defeat the English team had ever suffered on its home soil. The Americans also beat Great Britain by 8-6 in the first encounter ever between the two squads.

During the defeat of England, Ms. Neff lost a contact lens, and pictures of her and players from both teams searching for it appeared in newspapers in Great Britain and were carried by U.S. national wire services. The incident happened "at the most crucial period of the game with the score at 4-4 and England very much on top," according to a report in a London newspaper. The five-minute stoppage of play, which did not turn up the missing lens, "upset England's rhythm," the London reporter claimed. However, the writer noted that "the Americans probably deserved to win for their superior fitness and stick work."

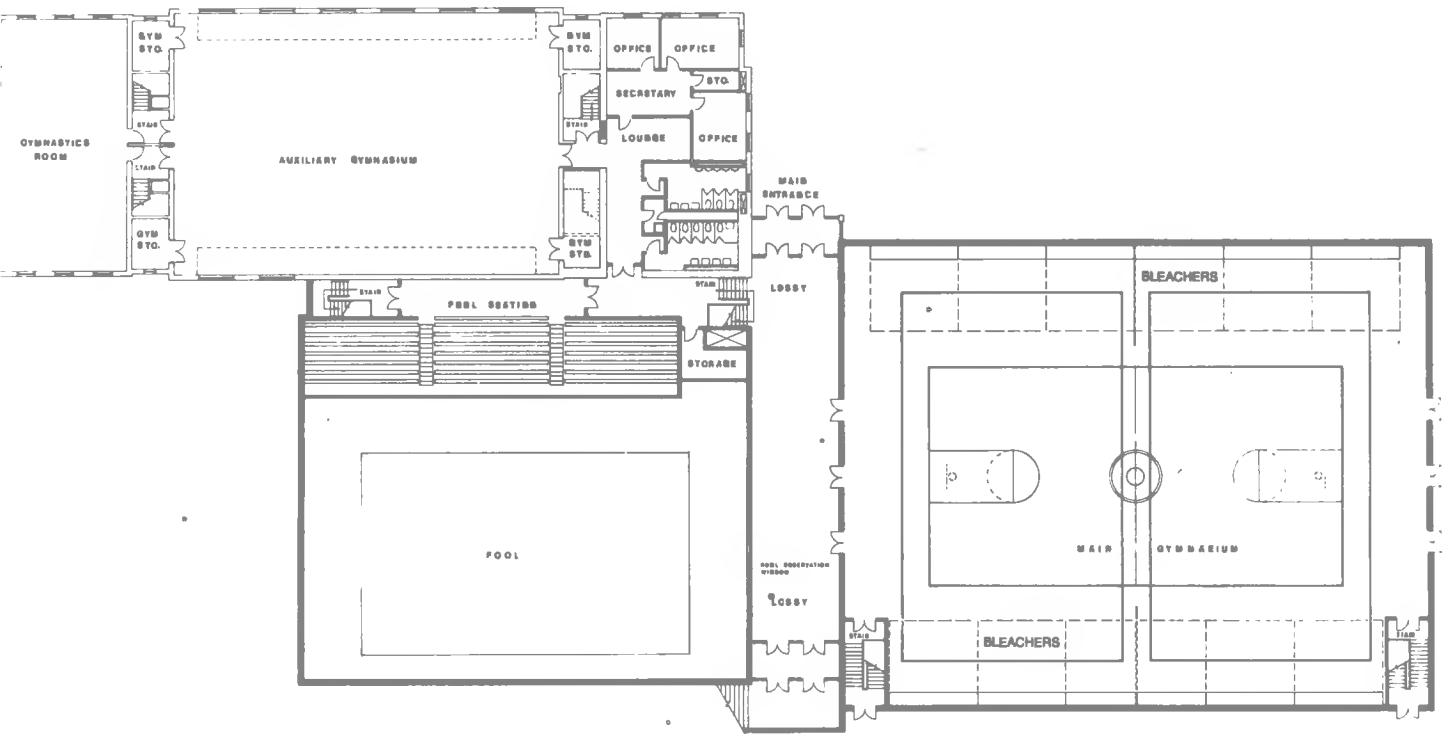

Upon her return to the U.S., Ms. Neff traded her lacrosse stick for a field hockey stick. At a regional tournament in Lancaster, Pa., she was selected as captain of the Mideast Team and led that squad to victory in the National Championship Tournament on the astro-turf of Madison College in Harrisonburg, Va., Nov. 26-30. It was the first U.S. Field Hockey Tournament at which a team champion was determined. A new national all-star team will be selected at a later date.

Women's-libbers at S.U. could take heart from the fact that one week after Ms. Neff's success the Crusader men's basketball team also visited Harrisonburg and lost both games it played in the Madison College Invitational Tournament.

Two-sport All-American Rose Ann Neff.

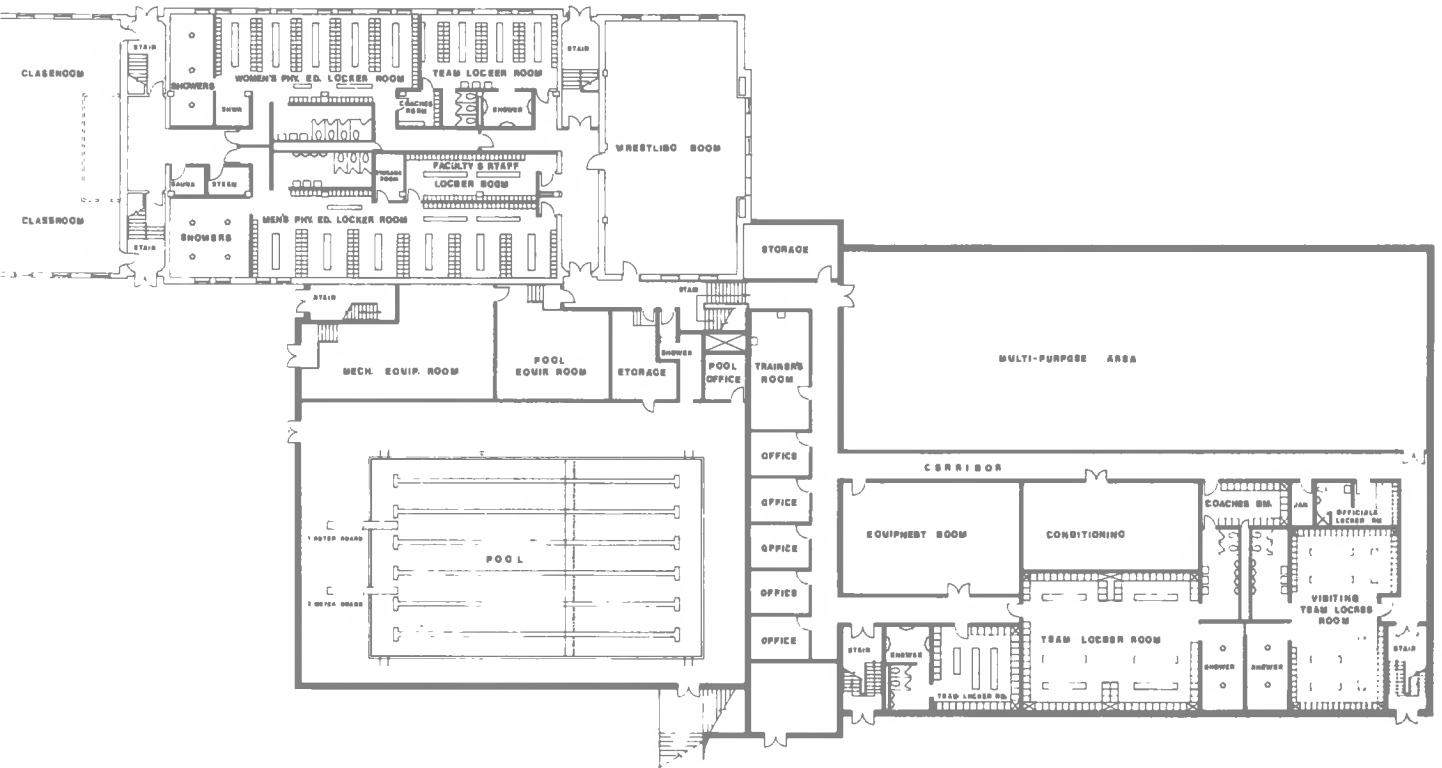

At this writing, construction of Susquehanna's new physical education building was right on schedule and going up fast with completion planned for September of 1976. And people on campus right after the Christmas holiday were treated to the spectacle of delivery and erection of 10 enormous concrete T-beams which form the roof of the swimming pool area—each is 90 feet long, 8 feet wide, and weighs 40 tons. The simplified floor plans opposite show what facilities are included on each floor. The rectangular area in the upper left of each drawing (without heavy line) is the existing Alumni Gym as it will appear when renovation is finished.

A Man and His Trains

HIS TOY TRAIN collection is one of the most extensive in the United States and LaRue C. Shempp '36 was honored several months ago with the appearance of Toy Train Treasury, Vol. 2, The Shempp Collection, published by Iron Horse Productions Inc. of Pittsburgh. Number 15 of the Limited Collector's Edition was promptly inscribed and presented to the library at Susquehanna.

A visit to the "train room" at the Shempp home in Williamsport, Pa., staggers the imagination. It contains 314 complete sets dating back to 1887, to say nothing about other special engines, trolley cars, and miscellaneous equipment.

LaRue, who retired two years ago after 36 years as a caseworker with the Lycoming County Board of Assistance, has been collecting trains since his early childhood when he arranged and worked the big Christmas season train layouts in Williamsport hardware and department stores. The hobby has persisted throughout his life and he likes to share it with others. Thousands of people—young and old alike—have enjoyed his personally-conducted tours of the collection and his lectures about trains. And a warm welcome mat is always out to fellow Susquehannans.

ON OUR COVER: LaRue C. Shempp '36 is the subject of our spring cover. He's an interesting person, an affable host, and a dedicated hobbyist whose colleagues have recognized him with an important publication. See the page opposite, and let him know when you are in Williamsport.

Inside, you'll find an up-to-the-minute report on Alumni Awards (this is actually being written before Alumni Day) and another on honorary degrees to be given at Commencement. Also, there are two articles written by students, one about Susquehanna's computer and the other about a unique course that was offered during the winter. Happy reading!

SUSQUEHANNA UNIVERSITY NONDISCRIMINATION POLICY

It is the policy of Susquehanna University not to discriminate illegally on the basis of race, color, religion, national or ethnic origin, age or sex in its educational programs, admissions practices, scholarship and loan programs, athletics and other school-administered activities, or employment practices. This policy is in compliance with the requirements of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, regulations of the Internal Revenue Service, and all other applicable Federal, State and local statutes, ordinances, and regulations. Inquiries regarding compliance with Title IX may be directed to Dr. Gustave W. Weber, President, Susquehanna University, Selinsgrove, Pennsylvania 17870, (717) 374-2345, or to the Director of the Office of Health, Education and Welfare, Washington, D.C.

THE '76 ALUMNI AWARDS

IN THIS, THE 21st year of Susquehanna University Alumni Awards, those honored at the Alumni Day luncheon were Lawrence M. Isaacs '43, for Achievement; Dr. Charles E. Chaffee '27, Dorothy Rothermel Chaffee '28, and William O. Roberts '29, for Service; Lowell L. Leitzel '76 and Marjorie A. Brouse '76, Senior Man and Woman Most Typifying the Ideals of Susquehanna.

The awards were made by Donald E. Wissinger '50, chairman of the Alumni Association Awards Committee, at the May 1 event which included the annual business meeting, induction of the Senior Class, reunions and other traditional features.

The first S.U. Alumni Awards were presented in 1956 to Jerry D. Bogar x'99 and Guy M. Bogar '21 for Achievement in their profession. The second, again for Achievement, went to two beloved Susquehanna professors, Dr. George E. Fisher '88 and Dr. John I. Woodruff '88. The first award for Service to Alma Mater was given in 1961 to Clyde R. Spitzner '37.

These early awards were in the form of framed scrolls. The currently-used bronze medal, given also retroactively to all previous winners or their survivors, was created in 1962, the same year in which the first Senior awardees were selected.

In all, 79 persons have thus far been honored. They make up an elite group—including, among others, leading educators, creative businessmen, pastors, scientists, writers and physicians. Four husband and wife teams have been recognized for Service. Two awards were made posthumously and 15 recipients have died since receiving the award.

The 1976 winners, like their predecessors, have made notable contributions to the University through their accomplishments while enrolled and/or after graduation. These are the selectees:

LARRY ISAACS '43 . . . remembered as a diminutive football quarterback in the early '40s, married to the former Louise Kresge '45 . . . veteran U.S. Navy Submarine Service officer . . . earned master's in business administration from University of Pennsylvania . . . held high positions with Price Waterhouse and Company, Bethlehem Steel, RCA Corporation . . . former president of S.U. Alumni Association, currently a member of the University Board of Directors and chairman of its Development Committee . . . most recently was executive vice president of the Allis-Chalmers Corporation and Board member of the Marine National Exchange Bank of

by LINDA LONG '76

"GOOD MORNING, HONORED GUEST, YOU HAVE STATION 03."

No, this is not a communication from Mars, it's just Susquehanna's friendly Burroughs B5700 computer giving you the go-ahead. When you sit down at the teletype keyboard, the first step in "talking" to the computer is to pick up a telephone receiver and dial a number which connects you with it. Next, the computer asks for your identification number and once you type it in, the computer verifies it and gives the above message, letting you know it's ready to receive your instructions.

Since its opening in November 1973, S.U.'s Computer Center has accumulated 2200 files or 50 million characters in its disc tape storage area, representing a total of three man-years of work. A file consists of data in the form of characters—both alphabetical and numerical—stored in the computer under a particular file name on a circular or disc tape.

Susquehanna's Computer Center is used extensively by both the administration and various academic departments. The Computer Center takes care of such functions as student billing and student grade reports as well as payroll and accounts payable and receivable. Academically, the Computer Center is used for statistical calculations and simulations and for the computer science courses themselves. Over three-quarters of the student body have taken computer science courses and Susquehanna now has approximately 20 actual computer science majors.

The concept of a computing center belonging to Susquehanna alone was born in July 1973 when a proposal was made to the Board of Directors suggesting the installation of a computing system. At this time Susquehanna shared Bucknell's computing system through a set of remote terminals, but it was felt that a system was needed here to serve both the academic and administrative communities. The original proposal was passed by the Board of Directors in August and a Burroughs B5700 computer was purchased with the aid of a grant from the Burroughs Corporation allowing a 60 percent discount to S.U. This grant was obtained through the efforts of Harry W. Butts '48, Philadelphia regional manager for Burroughs and a past Alumni Association president. He is now a member of the University Board of Directors. Our computing system was acquired in November 1973 and was ready for use at the dedication of the Learning and Computer Centers in January 1974. The Computer Center is under the direction of Ronald E. Feltman '58, with Dr. Wallace J. Growney serving as coordinator of academic services and Eugene Wynn as coordinator of administrative services.

The ALUMNUS you are now reading was sent to you by our friendly Burroughs B5700 which produces over a half-million labels per year for various mailings, which include Susquehanna Note, Alumni Association information, billings, and student grade reports. Not only does the computer print out these labels but it can compile a particular list for a specific mailing from several other lists, such as students, parents, alumni, pastors, and "friends."

Files are kept which trace students from their initial inquiry and application for admission, to their acceptance and enrollment or withdrawal, to their graduation. These historical files of applications, maintained for about five years, are utilized by the Admissions Office for recruiting purposes. A list can be obtained of all students at Susquehanna from a particular high school, with their academic records. This allows the Admissions staff to provide information to guidance counselors at particular high schools, enabling the counselors to predict how well other students from that high school will do at Susquehanna.

The Alumni Office can obtain information in several different forms: a geographical listing of alumni to aid in establishing district clubs; a listing of alumni by class to help in planning class reunions; a listing of alumni by major.

Another file kept by the computer details the anticipated enrollment in courses to be offered in the succeeding term. Students sign up for courses they wish to take and when these lists are processed, the result is a preregistration list which shows the number of students who will be tentatively enrolled in the various courses. This information not only allows the Campus Bookstore to order the correct number of books for each course but also lets the University determine the student demand for courses over a period of time. The number of students enrolled in each course can be calculated, and the University can assess trends in enrollment in certain courses and estimate the future demand for courses to see if the enrollment warrants their continuation.

Introductory Computer Science was taken by 260 students this year. Here, two of them work at keyboards that are linked to the computer by telephone. Several terminals (lower left) are also stationed in administrative offices. At left, Feltman and Wynn solve a problem in the Computer Center, located on the ground floor of the Campus Center.

Financial aid lists in the computer record the amount and type of aid given to each student as well as a summation of the different ways in which financial aid is allocated to students in general. Reports generated by the computer about this aid distribution, combined with reports about anticipated admissions, allow the University to better prepare and administer its yearly budget. The Director of Admissions, through the use of the computer, can determine class number and general enrollment goals and can predict prospective majors, which aids in assessing the department staffs needed for the coming year. By using these enrollment projections, the Director of Financial Aid can also better project the amount of financial aid needed for the following year. The Vice President for Finance makes extensive use of monthly computerized account reports to keep track of funds during the year and to prepare the budget for the upcoming year.

By far the single largest academic use of the Computer Center is the computer science courses and the new computer science major program itself. The introductory course in computer science, taken by approximately 260 students this year, emphasizes the actual uses of computer programming, the history of computation, analysis of the computer itself, and the role of computers in society. The Computer and Information Science major, instituted this year under the Department of Mathematical Sciences, has approximately 20 majors. It places computer science in a liberal arts rather than a business or engineering context, and includes discussion of the ethical considerations involved in the use of such technology.

A brand new development in Susquehanna's computer classes came about through a $3700 grant from the National Science Foundation. As a result of this grant, Susquehanna has been able to permit anyone teaching a course to use the computer in the classroom. Using a telephone link to the computer, a portable teletype keyboard, and a video projector, a professor can project the computer input and output on a large screen in the classroom. Instead of describing how to do something on the computer, the professor can demonstrate the actual process. Few schools of comparable size in the Pennsylvania-New Jersey-Maryland area have such capability.

The second largest use of the computer is for statistical analysis and calculations by the Business, Psychology, Chemistry, Geology, and Political Science departments, as well as by individual students and faculty members. Statistics are also calculated by the computer for the basketball and football teams. Statistical summaries of each game are submitted to the computer, which generates up-to-date season totals for the team and individual players. The football coaches use the computer to help scout opponents. Team representatives watch the opponent twice before the game and the data they bring back is processed to give a scouting report, that is, what an opponent's offense and defense is likely to do in certain situations.

Coaches in both men's and women's sports may also use the computer to locate prospective sports participants among new students. Upon application, students fill out cards listing the activities in which they participated in high school. This information is maintained in an activities file and coaches can contact students who participated in certain sports in high school to ask them to try out for the Susquehanna team.

In addition to using the computer for statistical calculations, the Business Administration Department uses it for simulation games which include simulation of production systems, marketing systems, and company finances. By utilizing these simulation games, students can experience the problems of managing or financing a company or marketing a product. An "executive" game combines the other types of simulations and approximates the various decisions an executive must make in running a company. The management game, for example, requires students to make production decisions based on information given them by the computer. The computer tells the students what materials are available, which workers are available, how well they are producing, and what the production goal is. Students will then decide what type and how much material to order, which workers to use and for how many hours, and what quantity of goods they will produce in a two-week period. However, overproduction or underproduction may be penalized. The object of the game is to achieve the maximum production at the minimum cost on the basis of the information the computer supplies.

The Environmental Studies Institute, under the direction of Dr. Frank W. Fletcher, also utilizes the computer for models which simulate real phenomena. One project involves simulation of the hydrological cycle, or the rain and stream flow, in the Middle Creek watershed. This simulation takes into account the type of land and soil, the dryness or wetness of the land, and stream flow. The hope is to be able to predict flooding in the area. Another simulation project concerns a "model of the world" which takes into account five sectors: population, agriculture, natural resources, economics, pollution. All these sectors interact and affect each other. The object of this simulation is to study various alternative combinations and make predictions about the availability and interaction of these five factors in the future.

Novelty programs also exist in the computer which enable a participant to play such games as "Star Trek," golf, football, and various card and word games. These programs are used mainly in the first few weeks of a term to permit students to gain familiarity with the computer. In the golf game, the computer prints out the hole number and yardage and the operator selects his club and tells the computer, which then prints out the result of the shot and the distance remaining to the hole. In the word game, the computer tries to guess a five-letter word of which the person at the teletype is thinking. The computer prints out a five-letter word and the operator tells the computer which letters in the computer's word are the same as his. By a continuous process the computer eventually guesses the word. The places may be reversed, with the operator trying to guess the computer's word. However, only one person on campus, Dan Wheaton of the English Department, has successfully "beat" the computer.

The ultimate teaching tool? James M. Handlan, assistant professor of mathematical sciences, punches out instructions on a portable unit. The material flashes on the desk-top TV monitor and is projected on the screen over his head for the entire class to see.

SCUBA MARINE SEMINAR

by JUDY RILE '78

SOME OF THE MOST BEAUTIFUL underwater life in the world can be seen just offshore of Grand Bahama Island in the Caribbean Sea. This past winter, fifteen Susquehanna students and two faculty members spent seven days in the Bahamas, taking advantage of the diving facilities as part of a new interdisciplinary course, the Scuba Marine Seminar.

The idea for the seminar had been discussed for over two years by Dr. Frank W. Fletcher of the Geology Department and Bruce S. Wagenseller of the Physical Education Department. Both men felt that more interdisciplinary subjects should be made available to the campus community. Fletcher and Wagenseller directed the inaugural session of the Scuba Marine Seminar at the Underwater Explorers Society headquarters in Freeport on Grand Bahama Island, February 27 through March 5.

The Underwater Explorers Society (UNEXSO) was chosen because of its reputation as having the best all-around diving facilities in the world, along with boasting a wide variety of recreational and sporting facilities. The society has on its premises various classrooms, a fairly extensive library, laboratory and equipment, darkrooms, a two-man decompression chamber, a 30 x 30 x 18-foot diving tank for instructional purposes, and a dive shop. The society also owns its own boat docks and several boats used for the diving expeditions.

The students who participated in the Scuba Marine Seminar each received one unit of physical education credit. Ten students earned a certificate in Marine Life Identification while five others received National Association Underwater Instructor Certification. Those studying marine life, and their majors: Howard "Scott" Beacham '77, Fayetteville, N.Y., accounting; Melinda Bumsted '77, Middletown, N.J., English; Joe Cramer '77, Philadelphia, Pa., biology; Gordon Glass '76, Piscataway, N.J., chemistry; Larry Hill '76, Bricktown, N.J., communication and theatre arts; Hal Kuehne '76, Oceanside, N.Y., biology; Steve MacGregor '77, Bay Head, N.J., biology; Lou Morrow '77, New Bloomfield, Pa., geology; Frank Stevens '77, Clark, N.J., liberal arts; Scott Wissinger '76, Hollidaysburg, Pa., biology. Those receiving NAUI certification: Anne Anderson '78, Camp Hill, Pa., communication and theatre arts; Scott Felter '76, Whippany, N.J., mathematics; Debbie Focht, a part-time student from Richfield, Pa.; LouAnn Morsberger '77, Baltimore, Md., sociology; Rick Thomas '76, Frackville, Pa., political science.

The program was far from the vacation one might expect when visiting the Bahamas. Each day started when Wagenseller roused everyone at 7 a.m. No one remembered to bring an alarm clock, so Wagenseller's "natural alarm" made sure that everyone was up bright and early! Those who wanted breakfast went to the dining area of the hotel. For those who were in the marine biology section, the class in marine life identification was usually held in the morning for two hours at the UNEXSO classrooms. Along with the lecture by a member of the staff of UNEXSO, color slides of the underwater life were shown. After the morning classes, time was allowed for relaxation or shopping.

Dives were held during the afternoons, with the students seeing for themselves the underwater life they had heard about that morning in the lecture. The students were encouraged to touch the various coral and plant life and were told not to be afraid to peek under rocks or into the many underwater caves for glimpses of the sea life. The beginning dives in the coral reefs were to a depth of only approximately 15 feet, but even there the fish and plant life were beautiful in color and shape. By the end of the seven days, the group was confident enough to go underwater to a depth of approximately 100 feet.

The other section of the group, working toward the National Association Underwater Instructor certificate, attended diving class in the morning and did most of its diving in the afternoons. This group got into greater depths and was able to view lobster and octopus in their natural habitat, along with the fire coral and sponges for which the Caribbean is noted. More than one of the students wished he had an underwater case for his camera.

Late afternoon often found most of the group relaxing on the beach and relating the day's activities. Evenings were spent either back at the hotel or patronizing the various clubs in Freeport, which is known for having one of the largest casinos of the Western Hemisphere.

All who participated in the seminar were impressed by UNEXSO and the expertise of the people who were in charge of the program. The complex itself is quite large and has everything necessary for the divers. The Underwater Explorers Society purchased the present facilities in 1965 from Jacques Costeau, who had used it as his headquarters in the Caribbean. The Society has handled over 110,000 divers, all without a single accident.

The main emphasis of the entire UNEXSO program is safety. All divers, before attempting an ocean dive, must exhibit minimum proficiency skills in the diving tank. In the 30 x 30 x 18-foot tank, each diver must be able to remove his mask, flood it, and then replace and clear the mask. Everyone must also remove the mouthpiece, disconnect the hose from the air tanks and replace it without any difficulty. Certified instructors were present for every dive undertaken by the group. Those students who had no previous diving experience were first given basic instruction in the pool on the UNEXSO property.

Many of the students felt that although they were kept very busy, the pace was less hectic than it is on campus. "Actually, our living pattern took us a while to get accustomed to," according to one of the participants. "We were in a hurry, but the natives were not. The pace of living is so slow. We kept running into this problem again and again." One example of this "problem" occurred the first morning when some of the group went to the hotel's restaurant for breakfast. It took one hour for the native waiters to bring them coffee and toast. Since the bus for the UNEXSO complex was by then ready to leave for the day, the students had to gulp down their breakfast in three minutes. That was the last breakfast venture for most of the group.

Despite their busy schedule, the students did find time to play "tourist." Most of them were impressed by the huge International Bazaar located near the hotel.

The bazaar is a ten-acre shopping area consisting of shops from various countries of the world, each of which is authentically reproduced in design and feeling. Local pubs also provided relaxation and a good atmosphere in which to share the experiences of the day.

Many members of the group took advantage of the perfect weather—sunny and warm with the temperature in the mid-80's—by going horseback riding and sailing at the UNEXSO complex. Melinda Bumsted even did some modeling for a publicity packet being prepared by UNEXSO and a nearby hotel.

The cost of this year's trip was $325, which included the roundtrip jet fare from Miami International Airport to the Bahamas, lodging at the Lucayan Harbor Inn, course tuition, and the five dives. The price did not include transportation cost to Miami and back North, nor did it include meals. While the price of traditional favorites like hamburgers and peanut butter and jelly sandwiches were up to three times the price paid in the United States, full meals such as steak cost about the same. Participants spent approximately an additional ten dollars a day for food.

Students and faculty alike agree that the program was worthwhile. It has been decided to schedule the Scuba Marine Seminar every year during the break between second and third terms. As of now, the trip for next year is being planned for February 25 through March 4. In addition to the option of taking either the Marine Life Certification or the National Association Underwater Instructor certification, each of which includes five dives, Fletcher and Wagenseller are trying to make arrangements for a third option, that of taking ten dives without attending any classes. That way, those who participated this year can go again without having to repeat any of the classroom instruction, although the ten-dive option will be open to anyone who participates in the program.

Anyone—students, faculty, and alumni—can participate in the Scuba Marine Seminar. Wagenseller expects the cost for next year's trip to be about the same as the one just completed. No diving experience is necessary, and all diving equipment is supplied by UNEXSO. Participation is limited to a maximum of 25 persons, but a minimum of 15 is needed for the seminar to be offered. Any interested persons should contact Dr. Fletcher or Mr. Wagenseller.

KUDOS AT COMMENCEMENT

Wick

Ahlstrom

COMMENCEMENT on May 22 will be the occasion for conferral of Susquehanna University honorary degrees upon four persons who are prominent leaders in their fields of endeavor. They are Sydney E. Ahlstrom, professor of American history and modern religious history at Yale University, doctor of letters; Edward V. Bonnemere, musician and composer of jazz masses, doctor of music; The Very Rev. Francis B. Sayre Jr., dean of the Washington Cathedral, doctor of laws; and Ruth C. Wick, director of the Mission on Six Continents, Lutheran Church in America, doctor of laws.

Dean Sayre will preach the Baccalaureate sermon and Dr. Ahlstrom will deliver the Commencement address. About 340 graduating seniors will be conferred with their bachelor's degrees.

Sydney Ahlstrom is one of the country's leading scholars of American religious and intellectual history and its European background. One of his books, A Religious History of the American People, received a National Book Award in 1973 and the Brotherhood Award of the National Conference of Christian and Jews in 1974. A native of Minnesota, he holds degrees from Gustavus Adolphus College, the University of Minnesota and Harvard University, where he taught before joining the Yale faculty in 1954.

"Eddie" Bonnemere, a Harlem-born public school music teacher in New York City, is said to be the foremost composer of contemporary church music in America. Believing that "liturgy must be born out of the music of our times" to be relevant to contemporary man, he has produced religious music in the jazz language for both Roman Catholic and Lutheran services and his work has been the subject of numerous concerts, TV specials, and workshops. The former Savoy Ballroom dance band leader has earned degrees from Columbia Teachers College, N.Y.U., and Hunter College.

Dean Sayre, born in Washington, D.C. and a product of Williams College and the Episcopal Theological School, has been at the sixth largest cathedral in the world since 1951. He is a former chairman of the U.S. Committee for Refugees, named by President Eisenhower to implement American participation in World Refugee Year, and, under President Kennedy, served on the President's Committee on Equal Employment. Earlier in his career, he was a Navy chaplain and also an industrial chaplain in Cleveland.

Ruth Wick is a veteran educator and church executive who has held high responsibilities in student work for the LCA, the National Lutheran Council, and the National Council of Churches. For the Lutheran World Federation, she directed the Office for International Exchange for 12 years. By discipline a psychologist, she also has taught at Yale Divinity School and Garrett Theological Seminary. She was born in Connecticut and graduated from Upsala College, Columbia University, and the University of Wisconsin.

A Visit From Ben

BEN FRANKLIN (Dr. Fred A. Grosse, professor of physics) was a frequent visitor to club meetings and classrooms in and around Selinsgrove during the past year, performing experiments as they were done 200 years ago and telling his audiences about his various interests and skills. His program was one of the two most popular offered by Susquehanna's Bicentennial Speakers Bureau—the other was "Colonial Women," a talk by Dean of Freshmen Dorothy M. Anderson '62. Other volunteer speakers who took part in the grand total of more than 65 programs were Dr. Gynith C. Giffin, professor of chemistry, who organized the bureau; Jean B. Beamenderfer '39, associate professor of business administration; Dr. James A. Blessing '63, assistant professor of political science; Dr. Nancy A. Cairns, associate professor of French; Dr. Thomas F. Livernois, assistant professor of religion; Dr. Richard H. Lowright, assistant professor of geology; Dr. Marian E. McKechnie, associate professor of history; Dr. Bruce L. Nary, professor of speech; Dr. Otto Reimherr, professor of philosophy and religion; and Dr. Elizabeth Wiley, professor of English. The series filled a definite program need in the area and a permanent speakers bureau is being planned for next fall.

SU Sports

by PETER SILVESTRI

THE WINTER SEASON saw some great individual performances by Susquehanna athletes, but not much success from a team standpoint, as the men's basketball team went 6-17, the wrestlers 3-11, and the women's basketball team, which has not won in 28 games dating back to 1973, 0-8.

Center Dave Long '76 of Doylestown, Pa., concluded a stellar basketball career as the third highest scorer in Crusader history with 1489 points. During the 1975-76 season Long averaged 17.9 points and 8.6 rebounds per game to lead the team in both categories. In Middle Atlantic Conference Northern Division competition, he averaged 18.7 points and 10 rebounds per game. He was the only player in the league to rank among the top five in both scoring and rebounding and was named to the first team of the MAC-North All-Star Squad. In successive outings in January Long totaled 30 points and 12 rebounds in a loss to Albright and a career-high 38 points and 15 rebounds in a win over Wilkes.

Long was the eleventh player in Susquehanna history to pass the 1000-point mark. The twelfth is likely to be guard Mike Scheib '78 of Millersburg, Pa., who has scored 640 points in two years. At 5-8, Scheib has emerged as perhaps the most exciting player in the MAC from the spectators' viewpoint and was named to the second team of the Northern Division all-stars. In addition to pleasing the fans, Scheib must also have impressed the coaches, who select the all-star squad. Although he did not rank among the MAC scoring leaders, he ranks among the best in terms of speed, quickness, passing, ball-handling, and defense. Scheib averaged 16.7 points for all games and 14.6 points for league games last winter. He led Crusader starters in shooting accuracy, hitting on 51 percent of his shots from the floor, and was tops on the squad from the foul line at 78 percent.

A little man who says he prefers being guarded by taller players because they are usually slower, Scheib often gives the impression that he could score at will. He darts past defenders with a quick burst of speed and then either stops on the proverbial dime for a jump shot or continues on for a driving, twisting layup which he somehow manages to flip in despite the upraised arms of the opposing big men. On those occasions when he can't get off a good shot, he is still effective, as his team-leading 110 assists attests. At the Roanoke Tournament in December, Scheib became a favorite of the crowd and was named to the All-Tourney team. In four consecutive games in late January and early February his stats from the field were 10 for 14 (71 percent), nine for 16 (56 percent), eight for 13 (62 percent), and 13 for 16 (81 percent) in a win at Delaware Valley in which he added four of five from the line to score a career-high 30 points.

At the annual winter sports awards banquet, Long received the squad MVP award and the "Mr. Basketball" award which goes to the player who shows the most dedication toward improving himself and the team. Scheib was named "Best Offensive Player," and guard Mike Feeney '77 of Mechanicsville, Pa., was tabbed "Best Defensive Player."

The most glaring weakness of the basketball team was a lack of consistency. It could look good against "big time" teams, as in narrow losses to Roanoke and Rider at the former's tournament, and then be outclassed 83-62 by the likes of Upsala, whom the Crusaders had beaten the year before when both had basically the same personnel. The Crusaders played their best when least expected, as in the 100-78 romp over a good Western Maryland team that finished 12-8 and a 12-point loss to Philadelphia Textile, ranked number-one in the nation in Division II at the time. And they played their worst on surprising occasions, as in a 95-76 loss to a York squad that Susquehanna had defeated by an almost identical 95-75 count the previous season.

The wrestling team was again plagued by a lack of manpower that resulted in forfeiture of bouts in some weight classes. Bill Finch '76 of Westminster, Md., was named the squad's "Most Valuable" after compiling a 15-7-1 individual record and taking third place in the 150-pound class at the MAC tournament. In addition to posting the team's best record, Finch led in takedowns and pins. Coach Charlie Kunes named heavyweight Bill Gustitus '77 of Minersville, Pa., the "Most Improved" and 134-pounder Dan Murnane '79 of Moorestown, N.J., the "Best Rookie." Gustitus came back from a knee injury that kept him out of action last winter to score a 9-5-2 mark while Murnane went 3-10 in what coach Kunes said was probably the most competitive weight class. Paul Burns '76, 142-pounder from Sayre, Pa., was plagued by injuries during his final two campaigns, but does have the distinction of having earned four letters in wrestling.

What can one say about the women's basketball team, whose freshman, sophomore and junior players and second-year coach Rose Ann Neff have never known victory? In fairness to the present coach and squad it must be said that the entire women's basketball program suffers from a history of neglect that cannot be overcome overnight. A sign which gives hope for the future is that the two best players on this year's team were freshmen—Sherry Rohm of Blain, Pa., and Janeen Kruse of Sparta, N.J., who finished one-two respectively in scoring and rebounding. In the past the women have suffered from lack of practice time because of male dominance in overcrowded Alumni Gym. The completion of the new physical education facility anticipated in the fall and the University's recent moves to grant equal practice time and an expanded game schedule to the women's teams should make participation in women's basketball more attractive both to current students and to potential recruits. Hopefully these developments and the continued hard work of coach and players will result in an end to the long victory drought next winter.

It is too early as this is written to pass along much news of the spring sports teams. However, the efforts of the baseball team, both on and off the field, should be noted. The players conducted a pre-season fund-raising drive and financed the team's first southern practice trip in over 10 years. Although no victories were recorded in southern exhibition games, the experience seems to be reaping benefits as the Crusader nine jumped off to a 6-0 start in the regular season. In the third game, righthander Ron Hanson '77 of Erie, Pa., pitched a no-hitter against Messiah, winning 4-0. Also off to a 4-0 start is the golf team, which owns the university's best record over the past 10 years.

THE UNITED STATES of America has entered its third century. We've seen parades and Tall Ships, heard songs and concerts, bought souvenirs, listened to speeches and read special articles reminding us of our country's past. Some Bicentennial observances are still going on, but the big, showy celebrations are winding down. It's been a great nostalgic kick—lots of fun for most of us—and the inspiration we've gained is certain to prove helpful as Americans learn to cope with the future.

Susquehanna University wasn't around in 1776. Missionary Institute (renamed in 1895) had its start in 1858. In that year James Buchanan was the 15th President of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt was born, Minnesota entered the Union as the 32nd State, the first Atlantic Cable was completed. The cornerstone of the Institute's first building (later named Selinsgrove Hall to honor the townspeople who gave funds for its construction) was laid on September 1 while classes for the first year were held in the old Trinity Lutheran Church. The permanent quarters were opened on November 1, 1859.

Fiercely proud of their building, several students in those early days created charcoal paintings of it. The one on our cover, dated 1861, is unsigned. In the beginning, the principal of the Classical Department, the Rev. Peter Born, his wife and four children lived in the north half of the first floor. Classrooms and a chapel were in the south half, more classrooms and student rooms on the second floor, and student rooms on the third. In the basement, with its earth floor, were the kitchen and dining room for the students and the Borns. A lot has happened since then, to our country and to the Institute. Reflecting on the past and the achievements of these 118 years, again, gives us inspiration to cope with the challenges of the future.

We begin our 119th academic year this fall. As in other recent years, the University had to close enrollment early—Susquehanna will open at capacity with some 425 new students among a total of approximately 1400. Also as in recent years, students are majoring in 26 different fields within the three (liberal arts, business, music) curricula. Many are taking part in a number of special programs designed to help them prepare for specific careers as well as absorb the basic ideas the liberal arts philosophy stands for. Some will serve internships, some alternate work and study through Cooperative Education, some spend a year abroad or a term in an urban setting, and some will chart their own course through self-designed majors. These are just a few of the ways new challenges are being met.

In the immediate future—only weeks away—is an event many alumni have looked forward to for a long time. On Friday, October 8, Susquehanna's new Physical Education center and swimming pool will be dedicated at a Founders Day Convocation scheduled for 7 p.m. The speaker is Dr. Kenneth H. Cooper, best-selling author of physical fitness books and director of the Aerobics Center in Dallas, Texas. He'll receive an honorary degree, too, as will Dr. Paul Boeder, internationally-recognized authority on optics and a onetime S.U. mathematics professor; The Very Rev. Ronald D. Jasper, dean of York, England; and the Rev. John W. Vannorsdall, the new chaplain of Yale University, formerly of Gettysburg College. This will be the first of the features of Homecoming Weekend—including, among others, Open House in the new building, a football game vs. archrival Juniata College, and a Cabaret Dance on Saturday night. All alumni are invited—we'll be looking for you.

ON OUR COVER: Selinsgrove Hall, Susquehanna's first building, from an old charcoal painting. Now housing administrative offices exclusively, it originally accommodated the entire school. Additional references will be found in the comments opposite.

Inside, besides our regular columns dealing with alumni themselves, Linda Long '76 has contributed another article, this one concerning a new program at Susquehanna—Cooperative Education, which began only last fall. Also of interest are coverage of Alumni Day and all reunion pictures are on pages 12 and 13) and Commencement, the fall itinerary of Admissions Office personnel, and a comprehensive rundown on what turned out to be a fine spring season for intercollegiate athletics (SU sports).

SUSQUEHANNA UNIVERSITY NONDISCRIMINATION POLICY

It is the policy of Susquehanna University not to discriminate on the basis of race, color, religion, national or ethnic origin, age or sex in its educational programs, admissions practices, scholarships and loan programs, athletics and other school-administered activities, or employment practices. This policy is in compliance with the requirements of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, regulations of the Internal Revenue Service, and all other applicable Federal, State and local statutes, ordinances, and regulations. Inquiries regarding compliance with Title IX may be directed to Dr. Gustave W. Weber, President, Susquehanna University, Selinsgrove, Pennsylvania 17870, (717) 374-2345; or to the Director of the Office of Health, Education and Welfare, Washington, D.C.

Entered as second-class matter September 26, 1931, at the Post Office at Selinsgrove, Pa. 17870, under the Act of August 24, 1912. Published four times a year by Susquehanna University, Selinsgrove, Pa.

Alumni have already read about this year's award winners and those who received honorary degrees. Here are glimpses of just a few of the other people and events that helped make Alumni Weekend and Commencement 1976

TIMES TO REMEMBER

At left, Don Wissinger '50 helps sign up Jessie Snyder Poet '04, the oldest alumna to return for the campus festivities—partially blind and 91, she is an avid swimmer and diver. Emeriti and 50th reunion alumni (above, Harry Rice '26) were again treated to roses and kisses from the May Court. Dr. Weber received the class gift of a tennis court from B.J. Lee, the first fair-sex Senior Class president in recent memory. On the rainy Saturday afternoon, alumni gathered in the cafeteria for an S.U. Symphonic Band concert, while others saw "The Streets of New York." The Parade of Classes preceded the annual Alumni Awards Luncheon.

MINUTES OF ALUMNI ASSOCIATION MEETING

THE SUSQUEHANNA University Alumni Association met in the Campus Center at Selinsgrove on Saturday, May 1, 1976 for the annual Alumni Weekend business session in connection with the Alumni Luncheon. There were 462 in attendance. The meeting was called to order by President George Bantley '41 and the invocation was pronounced by the Rev. Dr. Edgar S. Brown h'75, chaplain to the University.

Following the luncheon, Buss Carr, director of alumni relations, introduced the May Court who assisted Maria Wernikowski MacFarlan in presenting remembrances to emeriti alumni and those celebrating the 50th anniversary of their graduation. Other reunion classes recognized were 1931, 1936, 1941, 1951, 1956, 1961, and 1966. The class of 1976 was received into the Alumni Association and its president, Elizabeth J. Lee of Westwood, N.J., announced the class gift of a tennis court, to be matched by another by the University. The two courts will be located east of the Roger Blough Learning Center adjoining the four courts already located there. The gift was accepted by Dr. Weber, president of the University, with appropriate remarks. Dr. Weber also introduced to the audience Ernst Mahr '36 of Ingilheim am Rhein, Germany, who was celebrating his 40th reunion. He was Susquehanna's first exchange student.

The business session opened with a motion to approve the minutes of the last meeting as reproduced and distributed. Maria MacFarlan '62, Alumni Day chairman, announced the weekend schedule and expressed appreciation to the persons who were instrumental in making the weekend a success. Lester Heilman '52, chairman of Club Activities, urged all alumni to become active in their local clubs and take part in the activities. Gene Stock '56 of the Nominations Committee announced the results of the election for the alumni representative to the University Board of Directors, Dr. Nelson E. Bailey '57, and for five members-at-large to the Alumni Association Executive Committee: Henry G. Chadwick '50, Graydon I. Lose '54, Kenneth F. Erdley Jr. '55, John H. Raab '62, Mary Mitchell Savidge '71. The slate of nominees to AA office for the coming year: George H. Bantley '41, president; William C.

Davenport '53 and Robert Hackenberg '56, vice presidents; Signe S. Gates '71, secretary. Chester G. Rowe '52, treasurer. There were no further nominations from the floor. Nominations were closed and the secretary was instructed to cast a single ballot for the entire slate. William C. Davenport '53, vice chairman of the University Relations Committee, referred to the published minutes with special mention of Alumni help in student placement.

Awards Committee Chairman Donald E. Wissinger '50 made these presentations for 1976: Senior Man and Woman Most Typifying the Ideals of Susquehanna to Lowell L. Leitzel of Selinsgrove and Marjorie A. Brouse of Williamsport, Pa.; Achievement Medal to Lawrence Isaacs '43 of Cincinnati, Ohio; Service Medals to Dorothy Rothermel Chaffee '28, Dr. Charles E. Chaffee '27, and William O. Roberts '29.

The luncheon meeting was adjourned with the singing of the Alma Mater.

Respectfully submitted,
Signe S. Gates '71, Secretary

It was a time for seeing old friends and comparing notes, for recognizing achievement and service, and for electing officers—George Bantley (left) was reelected president of the Alumni Association. Alumni Weekend ended with a Worship Service and sermon by Pastor Walter Brandau '51 of Milton, Pa.

Baccalaureate preacher Francis B. Sayre, dean of the Washington Cathedral, makes a point to Eddie Bonnemere and President Weber. Bonnemere delighted the Baccalaureate audience with his part-Gregorian, part-jazz anthem "Help Me, Jesus," performed with the help of the SU Choir. Below, right, Yale historian Sydney E. Cooperative Education at Susquehanna

by LINDA LONG '76

AS AN EMPLOYER wouldn't you like to give potential future employees on-the-job training before you hire them? As a student wouldn't you like to receive academic credit and pay for practical work experience? Susquehanna's Cooperative Education program fills both needs.

Cooperative Education, begun at Susquehanna in September 1975, seeks to provide students with job experience that is related to their academic work. Cooperative Education Director Kenneth J. Wise explains that the program attempts to offer opportunities for work assignments with academic relevance in order to integrate classroom learning with actual experience.

Typically the students, primarily juniors and seniors, work for two ten-week periods separated by a ten-week period of on-campus study and receive academic credit as well as pay for the internships.

Salary is a matter of negotiation between student and employer.

Various academic departments at Susquehanna have offered off-campus internships for some time—several have been featured in this magazine. Compared with these existing programs, Cooperative Education represents “not a difference in kind, but a difference of degree,” says Wise. That is, his aim is to increase the number of such experiences and to expand into other disciplines and career settings.

*Linda Long of Connellsville, Pa., received her B.A. in political science in May.
As a senior, she served an internship in the University's Public Information Office.*

Under some Cooperative Education programs at other schools, students alternate terms of employment with terms of study throughout their college years, and some programs do not offer academic credit for the internships. However, the S.U. faculty believes that the system of offering two internship terms for academic credit to upperclassmen better suits the needs of students and the degree requirements and academic standards of Susquehanna.

Some Cooperative Education internships are located near Susquehanna, allowing students to live on campus and to enroll in classes at the same time, if they wish. These include positions with the Snyder County Trust Company in Selinsgrove, First National Trust Bank in Sunbury, Swineford National Bank in Middleburg, and the Snyder County Planning Commission.

Current internships also include positions with Tressler-Lutheran Service Associates and Pennsylvania Blue Shield in the Harrisburg area, Citizens First National Bank in Ridgewood, N.J., Ford Motor Company Assembly Plant in Mahwah, N.J., and Capital First Corporation in Philadelphia. Wise recently concluded an agreement for future placement of interns with the West Branch Manufacturers Association, a group of 192 business firms covering a nine-county area in north-central Pennsylvania. This summer there are eight Susquehanna students in co-positions, and they are expected to earn a total of nearly $13,000.

Although most interns are students of business or mathematics and computer science, Wise hopes to be able to place interested students from practically all academic disciplines. In any case, he says, "the educational value of an internship is our primary concern." In other words, the goal is to put students in work situations where they can learn rather than merely perform mundane and routine office chores.

The Cooperative Education program was funded during its first year by a grant from the U.S. Office of Education. The University recently received notice that a grant of $16,000 is forthcoming to fund the program for the 1976-77 academic year. A third year of Federal funding is anticipated and the University plans to assume the costs thereafter.

As a formal concept Cooperative Education has existed since 1906 when the first such program was instituted by the University of Cincinnati. The idea has experienced a great period of growth since 1963 with the number of institutions offering the program increasing from 55 to nearly 1000. The U.S. Office of Education is contributing about $11 million per year in funding for developing programs and workshops for training administrators.

Students are hired by the employers through the normal job-interviewing process. Wise says that his office tries to find more students than there are positions available, and then to expose them to the interview experience. Cooperative Education will help students develop resumes and prepare for interviews, but it is the employer who makes the final choice on whom to hire. The policy of Cooperative Education is to find positions and allow students to apply for them, rather than to place the students and guarantee them jobs. Through this experience undergraduates can become aware of career opportunities and the job-interviewing process, hopefully giving them an edge in the job market after graduation.

The salary students receive may serve as a supplement to financial aid and may be used to help pay the cost of tuition, room and board, books, and other college expenses.

Reaction from some of Cooperative Education's first student interns has been quite favorable. Jon Eich '77, a finance major from Carmel, N.Y., worked with the Snyder County Planning Commission on its Highway Interchange Study of Routes 11 and 15, which concerns the erection of an industrial park around the Penn Valley Airport in Selinsgrove. The purpose of this study was to investigate possible problems involved in planning industrial development there.

Eich feels that his internship was very worthwhile. "The internship opened a whole new horizon to me," he says. "I may investigate planning as a career and I see that I will have to conduct a more rigorous study of the field than I was expecting to. Cooperative Education is a good program. It provides exposure we can't get on campus. I think it will help students looking for career opportunities," Eich says.

Sara Bransom '76, a political science major from York, Pa., took up where Eich left off at the Planning Commission. She continued and updated his study of the planned industrial park near the airport. She, too, feels that Cooperative Education is a valuable program.

"This internship was important to me in that it was a testing ground," she says. "I wanted to get an understanding of the planning field in order to decide if I should pursue it as a career. I wanted to gain a working experience combined with what I was learning in the classroom. The internship was also valuable in that it gave me a different perspective outside the world of Susquehanna University. I had contact with many public officials and business people whom most Susquehanna students never get to know and I experienced the attitudes and problems of many people in this area that I hadn't learned about in the classroom," relates Miss Bransom.

Brian Archibald '77, a junior finance major from Caldwell, N.J., worked with the First National Trust Bank in Sunbury. He audited tellers and had exposure to all facets of banking, such as general operations and mortgages. He feels that he has gained an insight into the banking field through his internship. "I recommend this program for anybody. It gives you a great opportunity to apply classroom learning to life and lets you find out if banking is for you," he says.

Employers benefit from the Cooperative Education Program by having a choice among several prospective student employees. Student employees are usually adaptable and enthusiastic and may free professional personnel for other tasks. Companies can also reduce the time and expense of job orientation by later hiring former student employees already familiar with company policies and the demands of the job. "Many corporations consider co-op students graduating at the baccalaureate level as candidates for employment competitive with those holding master's degrees but possessing no work experience," Wise says.

Any alumni wishing to explore the possibility of employing Susquehanna students may contact Ken Wise in the Cooperative Education Office at the University.

Archives Benefit from Fern Oglie Estate

Susquehanna's Roger M. Blough Learning Center was the recipient this year of archival material from the D. Fern Oglie Estate. Miss Oglie, an alumna of the Class of 1927, was a prominent Somerset, Pa., businesswoman and official of the Central Pennsylvania Synod of the Lutheran Church in America. Her book, Teaching God's Children, is included in Learning Center holdings.

Among materials received are recital and Star Course programs, bulletins, copies of Susquehanna Alumnus and The Susquehanna, athletic schedules, class photos, and diplomas. The collection was donated by Miss Oglie's sister, Mrs. Merle V. Fox of Falls Creek, Pa.

39 years in public schools in Pennsylvania and Delaware as a teacher and administrator. Susquehannans among his survivors are sister Nancy Lecrone Fay '29 and brother Arthur E. Lecrone '30.

Dr. Dorothy Bonawitz '20, Sunbury, Pa., April 26, 1976. She received an M.A. from Bucknell University and a Ph.D. from Penn State University. She was executive director of the Montour County Department of Public Assistance, in whose office she was murdered by an intruder.

Sovilla Rowe Gargie '42, Selingsgrove, Pa., April 27, 1976. She did graduate work at Bloomsburg State College and was an elementary teacher in the Selingsgrove area school district.

Dr. Arthur J. Gelnett '46, Milton, Pa., April 30, 1976. He received the D.D.S. from the University of Pennsylvania and did post graduate work at Georgetown University and the University of San Juan. An Air Force veteran of World War II, he began his dental practice in 1950 and was on the staff of the Evangelical Community Hospital, Lewisburg, where he served as treasurer and was the former chief of staff of the dental department. A memorial service was conducted by his pastor, the Rev. Walter L. Brandau '51 of Trinity Lutheran Church.

Richard A. Neff '59, North Brook, Ill., May 2, 1976. He was an accountant until 1970 when he and an associate established Consolidated Travel Companies Inc. He traveled extensively overseas and was married to the former Margaret Pattyson '59.

Alice Deiterick Lawrence '40, Mansfield, Ohio, May 9, 1976. She was self-employed as a music instructor and professional organist.

The Rev. D. Lloyd Bomboy Sem., Bloomsburg, Pa., May 15, 1976. He served a number of parishes in Pennsylvania, retiring in 1957 after more than 25 years as pastor of the Buckhorn Lutheran Charge. He is survived by his son and daughter-in-law, the Rev. David E. '48 and Betty Smith Bomboy '48.

John V. Walsh '43, Kensington, Md., May 19, 1976. He spent 24 years with the FBI and in 1971 joined Pepsi-Cola. At the time of his death, he was vice president and comptroller.

Paul K. Jarrett '17, Sunbury, Pa., May 28, 1976. He earned his M.A. from Bucknell University. He taught in Pennsylvania schools for 40 years and retired in 1960 from the Sunbury area school district.

Dr. Thomas F. Armstrong Jr. h'52, Selingsgrove, Pa., May 29, 1976. He was professor emeritus of business administration at Susquehanna, having taught here from 1947 until 1970 when he retired. A graduate of Wesleyan University, Harvard Business School, and Temple University, he also taught at Temple and at Beaver College. Keenly interested in closer relationships with students, Dr. Armstrong was cited for his devotion and service as the dedicatee of The 1964 Lanthorn. A bachelor, he continued to take his meals in the University cafeteria after his retirement and was well known and respected by current students and faculty as well as his own students and colleagues.

The Rev. Dr. Martin L. Dolbeer Sr. '16, Greenville, Pa., June 6, 1976. Professor emeritus of religion at Thiel College, he was a graduate of Hamma Divinity School, received an M.A. from the University of Chicago Divinity School and the D.D. from Wittenberg University. He was a Coast Artillery veteran of World War I. He served pastorates in Ohio, was a Lutheran missionary to India 1921-1954, and taught at Thiel 1956-1967.

ADMISSIONS ITINERARY

THE SUSQUEHANNA Admissions Office again releases its itinerary to assist alumni in arranging contacts for their children and friends. Please call the office at (717) 374-2345 or write ahead for appointments, either on campus or at any of the locations listed. The present staff includes Paul W. Beardslee, director; James M. Skinner '64, associate; William C. Heyman and Barbara A. Lomar, assistants. Dean of students Edward J. Malloy and assistant director of development Carl M. Moyer '63 lend assistance too.

SU Sports

by PETER SILVESTRI

IT HAS BEEN THE CUSTOM for the summer edition of this column to give an extensive preview of the upcoming fall sports season, particularly football. However, it also has become apparent that a glowing forecast from this writer is a virtual "kiss of death." We predicted a winning football season for 1974 and the team went 4-5-1. We went a little further last year, predicting an undefeated season, and the football team responded with 3-6. Also, there is a lot of spring activity to be reported and space does not permit much of an advance look at the fall. So, all in all, perhaps it's a case of the less said the better.

The football team will have 24 returning lettermen. The entire offensive unit returns intact with the exception of split end Jeff Steltz who should be capably replaced by John Xanthis '77 of Newburgh, N.Y. Hadley Brown '77 of Millersburg, Pa., will be back at quarterback along with Paul O'Neill '78 of Stratford, N.J., at fullback, Mike Monahan '77 of Rockville, Md., at guard, and Academic All-American Gerry Huesken '77 of Palmyra, N.J., at tackle, to name a few.

The defense may be a problem as graduation took some key linemen and linebackers. Veterans returning to the defense include 1975 team interception leaders John Fiske '78 of Rumson, N.J., and Brad Moore '77 of Old Saybrook, Conn., in the secondary. Let's just say that we hope the Crusader gridders can pick up in 1976 where they left off last year, when they won their last three in a row.

Crusader athletic teams enjoyed one of their most successful seasons in history during the spring of 1976. The baseball and golf squads had their best campaigns in over 10 years and the women's tennis team had its first winning season. Overall the spring record was 38-28 for a winning percentage of .576, the best single season mark since the fall of 1969 and the best spring results since 1965.

The baseball team won more games than any previous Susquehanna nine and its 17-11 record was the best since the 16-5 slate of 1965. The golf team won 10 and lost only 2, best since the 8-1 mark of 1964. The women's tennis team went 3-2 for the first winning record since the sport was organized at Susquehanna in 1968. The track and field squad finished at 5-6 and men's tennis at 3-7.

In the fall of 1969 football was 6-3, soccer 7-4-1, and cross country 11-1. Combined with a winless field hockey record, the total was 24-15, a .615 winning percentage. In the spring of 1965 the 16-5 baseball team and the 7-1 golf squad offset losing marks in tennis and track for an aggregate of 32-18, a .640 winning percentage.

Highlights of the baseball season included six straight wins at the outset, a split of two exciting and well-attended games with Bucknell in Selinsgrove, and a runner-up finish in the post-season ECAC Southern Regional Tournament. Unfortunately, four of the losses came against Wilkes and Elizabethtown, and the Crusaders finished behind them in their division of the MAC, failing to qualify for the league playoffs.

It was in the ECAC event, played against top-notch competition in Elizabethtown, that coach Jim Hazlett's Crusaders really showed their worth. Coming into the tourney with a 13-9 mark, Susquehanna was not among the seeded teams which drew byes in early rounds of the double-elimination affair. The Crusaders passed their first test by defeating California State 9-5 on a Thursday afternoon.

Then the fun began. Despite the fact that the start of Friday's games was delayed until 1 p.m. by rain, the Hazlettmen played three games before nightfall. Well, almost. After losing to eventual champion Mansfield State, the Crusaders bombed Lock Haven State 12-5, avenging a regular season twinbill sweep by the Bald Eagles and eliminating them from the tournament. Then S.U. and Scranton battled for eight innings before darkness called a halt with the score tied at 8-8.

That tie game was replayed from the beginning the next morning, with Susquehanna winning 11-3 behind the pitching of Paul Johnson '78 of Ellington, Conn., who went the distance in the first starting assignment of his college career. Next the Crusaders eliminated another opponent who had previously taken both ends of a doubleheader from them, defeating Elizabethtown 5-2. Righthander Pete Callahan '78 of Park Ridge, N.J., who had gone the distance for the win over California State on Thursday, came back to go the route against the Blue Jays on only one day's rest.

In the championship game the exhausted Crusaders, who were playing their seventh game in three days and sixth in two days, again met Mansfield State, which was playing only 'its third game of the tournament and its first that day. The Mounties won 11-4.

Catcher Bill Hart '78 of Weatherly, Pa., started every game behind the plate and was rested for the last few innings only three times during the season. He caught every inning of the three-day ECAC marathon. The "Iron Man" was the team's best hitter, batting .382 with five home runs and 24 RBIs to lead in all three categories. He also led the squad in total hits with 34 and doubles with seven. Hart received coach Hazlett's Highest Offensive Rating award, based on success at getting on base, advancing runners, avoiding double plays, and other factors.

The Best Pitcher award went to Callahan, who compiled a 7-1 record with an earned-run-average of 2.51 (based on seven-inning games). In 53 innings Callahan gave up only 12 walks, while striking out 28. Lefthander Dave Brown '76 of Williamsport, Pa., pitched well all season but cost himself a chance for more wins with his own fielding errors. Despite a 2.16 ERA, Brown won only four games while losing five.

The award for the Most Improved Player went to left fielder Tim Denard '76 of Levittown, Pa. After batting only .135 in 1975, Denard became one of the top hitters on the team this year. He finished with a .357 average, four home runs, and 20 RBIs. He led the team in triples with four. Skip Limberg '79 of Easton, Pa., earned the Best Rookie award. He became the starting center fielder when John Xanthis was injured, and batted .375.

Other regulars were right fielder Mike Kennedy '77 of Havertown, Pa., first baseman Fred Hickman '77 of Mt. Holly, N.J., second baseman Brad Moore, shortstops Larry Jacobs '76 of York and John Hilton '79 of Pittsburgh, third baseman Rob Hazel '77 of Chesapeake City, Md., and pitchers Ron Hanson '77 of Erie (whose no-hitter against Messiah on April 3 was reported in this column last issue), Bill Robinson '76 of Fair Haven, N.J., and Bob Manning '78 of Livingston, N.J.

The golf team has the University's best total record over the past decade and has had the best Crusader season mark in each of the last two years. The 10-2 card this year followed 11-3 in 1975.

The biggest afternoon of the campaign came on April 15 when coach Buss Carr's golfers shot their best team score since medal play replaced match play in 1972. The best five Crusaders totaled 374 for a three-stroke win over Bucknell, first golf victory over the Bisons in Susquehanna history. Making up the S.U. total were two 72s, two 75s, and an 80, while the Bisons' best five scores were 72, 75, two 76s, and 78. It was college golf at its best on the Susquehanna Valley Country Club course, as only one of the 14 players, the Crusaders' seventh man, came in over 80.

The win over Bucknell was Susquehanna's sixth in a row without a loss. The Crusaders stretched the string to nine before losing two of the last three, to Wilkes and Gettysburg. The major disappointment of the campaign was that, as in 1975, the team could not carry its dual meet success over into tournament play. The Crusaders finished seventh in the Middle Atlantic Conference Championship. They were among seven teams invited to the district qualifying round for the NCAA Division III Tournament, but finished tied for third while only the top two teams went on to the national event.

Susquehanna's number-one man, Gage Bolton '77 of Hummelstown, Pa., finished second in the qualifying tournament after losing a sudden death playoff, and received an individual berth in the NCAA Championship at Springfield, Ohio. There he had rounds of 77-76-79-79 for a 311 total to finish among the top 40 in the field of 120 collegians. During the regular season Bolton averaged 75.1 per round. Close behind was Mike McFatridge '78 of Glen Rock, Pa., at 75.8. Other top players were Steve Farrell '76 of Bloomfield, Conn., 79.8; Joe Mafera '77 of Locust Valley, N.Y., 80; and Mark Bostic, '78 of New Freedom, Pa., 82.1.

Ginny Davis '77 of Warminster, Pa., has been the number-one singles player for the Susquehanna women's tennis team ever since she walked on the courts in her freshman year. Despite having to take on the best the opposition had to offer, she had the Crusader squad's best individual record at 3-4 as a yearling and 5-2 as a sophomore. This year she attained the ultimate in athletic success, the undefeated season. She is the first tennis player, male or female, to do so at S.U. In winning all five of her singles matches Ms. Davis improved her three-year career record to 13-6. She has now won eight in a row going back to 1975.

While winning is nothing new to Ms. Davis, it is something of a novelty for her team. Women's tennis was initiated as an intercollegiate sport at Susquehanna in 1968 and it took nine years to record the first winning season. This spring the women defeated Dickinson, Juniata, and Chavers, Carr, and Hill. Buss Carr's 7-year golf coaching record, 60-32.

Marywood to offset losses to Bloomsburg State and Shippensburg State, while a sixth scheduled match with Moravian was rained out. Only twice before, in 1968 and 1974, had the Crusader women won more than one match in a season. Never before had they won three.

Second and third singles players Jill Simpson '77 of Fort Washington, Pa., and Christi Chavers '79 of Colts Neck, N.J., also had winning marks at 3-2. The history-making campaign was another feather in the cap of second-year coach Connie Delbaugh, who brought the University its first winning field hockey season in 12 years in the fall of 1974.

Although not passing the .500 barrier, the track and field squad did achieve its best record since the 5-3 mark of 1972 by winning five and losing six. Sprinter Scott Harris '76 of Silver Spring, Md., who had not been a big winner during his first three years at S.U., concluded his career with a truly fine senior season. A consistent winner in the 100- and 220-yard dashes and anchor man on good 440 and mile relay squads, Harris led the team with 90 points and was named Most Valuable by coaches Bob Muirhead and Bill Frey.

Other '76ers among the team leaders were Dave Long of Doylestown, Pa., and Jeff Yoder of Mt. Carmel, Pa. Long, the third highest scorer in Crusader basketball history, broke his own school record in the high jump at 16-5½ and also won points in the discus and javelin. Yoder broke his own S.U. record in the mile at 4:20.4 and established the school mark in the three-mile run, a new event in college track this year, with a time of 16:05.2.

Yoder, who joined an elite group by adding a fourth track letter to his four cross country letters, was the 1976 recipient of the Blair Heaton Memorial Award. Holder of the B.A. cum laude in psychology, Yoder is listed in Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges.

At the MAC meet, the Crusaders finished 11th in the field of 19. Harris was fifth in both the 100 and 220, Long took third in the high jump, and Yoder came in fifth in the mile. Other Susquehanna winners were Mitch Storey '76 of Palmyra, Pa., sixth in the high hurdles; Bruce Koenecke '77 of Westfield, N.J., fourth in the 880; and Chris White '79 of Washington Crossing, Pa., fifth in the pole vault.

Men's tennis, which turned in some fine seasons in the 1960s, is on somewhat of a decline of late. The team has not enjoyed a winning season since 1967 and this year's 3-7 mark was the worst since the 1-10 slate of 1972. Lacking any real top-notch performers, the Crusader netmen won most of their points in the lower singles and doubles positions.

Pete Burton '78 of Chatham, N.J., who saw some duty at quarterback with the Crusader football team last fall, turned in a 6-4 mark at third singles and was named the team's Most Valuable by coach Bill Moore. Quarterbacking and tennis playing seem to go together at Susquehanna. Signal-caller John Bird '76 of Bloomsburg earned a tennis letter two years ago. Burton has now earned two letters in tennis. However, he is likely to give up quarterbacking this fall and play at running back or defensive back, according to coach Hazlett. We sure hope it doesn't ruin his tennis game.

Joe Strode '77 of West Chester, Pa., was 5-5 in the fifth singles spot and was named the squad's Most Improved. Larry Hill of Bricktown, N.J., and Jim Packer of Aldan, Pa., both '76, earned their fourth letters in tennis.

Although he didn't know the difference between a scrum and a line-out until last fall, and probably is still unsure of the difference between a ruck and a maul, Jim Handlan, assistant professor of mathematics, assumed advisorship of the Rugby Club this year. Since he has worked with the Ice Hockey Club in that capacity for a few years, Handlan seems to be building an empire of club sports. However, he is not expected to be involved with the new women's volleyball club being organized for next year. An apparent devotee of mayhem, Handlan not only advises these two clubs, but also insists on joining the youngsters on ice and pitch and playing these two most violent of sports.

Staging all its games at a community rink in Sunbury at odd hours of the day and night, the Hockey Club did not draw many fans. Those who did attend were liable to be attacked by members of the opposing team, according to a report in The Crusader of a game when assaults on the ice were extended to assaults in the stands by one foe which shall remain nameless here. There were no serious injuries and the Crusader pucksters survived to finish the season with a 4-11-3 mark as the only college team in the Susquehanna Valley Hockey League. The Rugby Club had winning records during both the fall and spring, their ninth and tenth winning seasons in a row.

Perhaps this magazine needs to institute a column devoted exclusively to keeping readers up-to-date on the continuing exploits of Rose Ann Neff of the Physical Education Department. Ms. Neff, whose All-American status in women's lacrosse and field hockey was featured in this column last winter, added to her laurels in May by being named to the first team of the 1976 national squad selected by the United States Women's Lacrosse Association.

There have been some changes in the coaching staff at Susquehanna. Barry Keadle was released as head basketball coach after voicing public criticism of the University administration regarding athletic policies. He has been replaced by Don Harnum who leaves the University of Delaware to return to a job he held here five years ago. Harnum was 23-23 in two previous seasons with the Crusaders and was 69-57 with the Blue Hens. Keadle, who originally replaced Harnum, was 46-73 at S.U.

Bill Moll, a former head football coach at Selinsgrove High School and more recently at Freedom High in Bethlehem and Red Land in the Harrisburg area, replaces Bill Frey as an assistant in football. Frey resigned to accept a post at Westminster College. Harnum and Moll will also assist with spring sports, although their exact duties have not yet been decided.
